A full account of Cincinnati's last festival will be found on the first page. Peace has been declared and the authorities are taking and inventory of the loss of property and the number of persons killed.

Alf Burnett's entertainment last Wednesday night was well attended, and enjoyed by a good house. Some of the boys were startled by unexpected and humorous "gags", with which he prodded them.

The Covington saloon keepers all took out license Saturday to get one year's start of the high license bill passed by the legislatue, before it was signed by the Governor, which is probably done by this time.

Our friend, John C. Mitchell, who hails from down on that classic stream, Gunpowder, is making great calculations on feasting on Alderney cream and honey this summer, having purchased an Alderney cow for $100.

J. O. Huey was in town Saturday, and is enthusiastic in favor of the pike; and he is not the only one in his neighborhood that lays awake o' nights thinking about the nice buggy rides to be enjoyed when the road is completed.

Henly Smith's last Night in Burlington.

He spent a bad night, occasionally sitting up in bed, in suppressed tones expressed fear of alligators and lizzes. He rose early and washed, and breakfasted on a dozen boiled eggs and half a ham.

Those wishing carriage painting, house painting, graining, in fact, any kind of plain or fancy painting, done should call on Joe Reed before letting out their work. He has made painting a study, and his work gives satisfaction.

At Dr. Smith's sale a mare and colt sold for $102; one young mare, $150; one Alderney cow, $78 and another, $100. By the prices realized for Alderney cows one is lead to believe that raising them is as profitable as the orange business.

That armed mob of 400 Boone county men that Tuesday's News Journal says camped in Covington Monday night never materalized. Cincinnati has more to fear from her cut-throats and thieves than she has of Boone county farmers.

Joseph Minor, of this place, and Miss Mary Alcorn, of Petersburg, were married last Thursday. Joe withstood cupid's attacks for many years, but, at last, one of the little fellow's darts penetrated Joe's heart and he had to succumb. We congratulate you, Joe.

Floods come and go, but we continue to do business at our old stand in Lawrenceburg, Indiana, and those wanting tombstones or monuments will find our prices and designs most satisfactory. John Beall, of Hebron, is our agent in Boone county. Hurschart & Co., Lawrenceburg, Ind.

The Talbott bill "to regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquors for the benefit of the Common School Fund in this State", has passed. The tax on a license to a tavern, coffee-house keeper, merchant or druggists, $50; and to sell all kind of liquors, $100. The tax will be $50 all round higher than at present.

Samuel L. Moore, an old resident of East Bend, committed suicide by hanging in the loft of his barn some time last Friday. His body was discovered about dark, but he had evidently been dead some hours. No cause can be assigned for the rash act, except his lonely life, he being a bachelor. He had often spoken of his friendless condition.

Prof. Ira S. Vaue, will lecture in the Court-house in Burlington next Monday, at which time he will explain and demonstrate with instruments the theory of the Chambers Lightning Rod. The Professor is a scientific gentleman and his lecture will be interesting and of much value to the public. Persons having buildings to rod should hear the lecture by all means. W. E. Piper and Chas. A. Fowler, Agents, Chambers Lightning Rod.

Our heavy weight friends, Legrand Gaines, Jno. H. Smith, Oscar Gaines and J. J. Lillard, were in last press day. The first three had had some experience in toying their muscle in printing a paper, and turned it to a good advantage to get the laugh on friend Lillard, whose abundance of muscle failed, when applied, to pull the machinery out of gear as he anticipated. The party went away satisfied that muscle is a requisite in a country printing office, notwithstanding no great amount of it is displayed in this office.

Personal Mentions.

[If you have friends from a distance visiting you or expect to be away from home on business or pleasure, let us have the item for this column.]

Prof. Stephenson and daughter, spent Saturday and Sunday here.

Mrs. Lillie Hall is visiting relatives in Cincinnati and Covington.

B. F. Power, tobacco dealer, of Cincinnati, was in town Saturday.

John L. Conner, proprietor of the Erlanger Hotel, was here Sunday.

Orville J. Harris, a prominent citizen of North's Landing, Indiana, was in town Tuesday.

Jhon F. Green, an industrious farmer of the southern part of the county, was in town Tuesday.

Our young friend, Richard Gordon, was in town Sunday. Crutches are still his companions.

Mrs. Alf Gaines and daughter, of the Bullittsville neighborhood, were visiting in Burlington, Sunday.

Mr. C. C. Stelber, representative of the Cincinnati Enquirer was in Burlington last Wednesday.

Dr. Smith's family is now on the road to Florida, its future home. The doctor and his wife have been citizens of this community for many years, having raised a large family, to each member of which the severing of associations of long standing, to be replaced by those of strangers in a strange land, was a serious and trying affair, and they leave many friends in Burlington and vicinity that were sorry to see them go. Having much faith in the doctor's medical ability, we are satisfied he will soon rank among the leading members of his profession in his new home.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Florence.

Our migratory boys appear to be getting restless as the second Monday in April approaches.

Prof. Alf Burnett assisted by Miss Helen Nash regaled us with one of his laughable entertainments on Thursday night of last week. The programme, which gave promise of a highly cultivated order, brought out a large audience of the best society, a large proportion being ladies, and but for the outrageous conduct of a party of roughs, who assume to be young gentlemen, the performance would have proved a pleasant recreation. Unfortunately no officers were present, and the good citizens haven't the moral courage to give information. These scamps are professionals in disturbing religious as well as social gatherings, and the grand jury will confer a favor upon us by paying their respects to this class of lawbreakers.

We have read of many thrilling adventures, blood curdling scenes and hair breadth escapes, but Uncle Asa Meacham has just furnished us with one, a description of his ride to Cincinnati and return a few days ago with a gentleman in a buggy-wagon, who hailed from Burlington, that I don't think has a parallel in history. Even General Putnam's ride down the hill of steps through a shower of British bullets is laid in the shade by Asa's tale. I can't impose on the room of the paper to tell the story, but will give you it in brief. One collision, in which Asa rode on the fore wheel 50 yards with his side for a break. Of the position of his partner I have no account, but were all together when stopped. Righted up, repaired and started—met a bicycle horse ran off, upset in mud 6 inches deep with Asa on top of the Burlington man, who was dragged 40 yards by the lines—horse stopped, righted up and tied up again and headed for Florence with Uncle Asa hold of the reins; in passing a pond where a man was washing a buggy, the horse shied and our Burlington friend gave a leap-frog evolution and was caught on the fly by the pike; re-loaded and made Florence as sick looking party as we have seen. Uncle Asa says that the Burlington friend had the advantage of him in numerous side dishes of which he didn't get a drop.

Normansville.

The back water has visited us again, but has not been so familiar and imprudent as to invade our houses.

The prospect for wheat and rye is varied and doubtful, and as Gus Oneter has gobbled up all the stock items and especially the thin rind, I say pig, and stop.

There has been an increased acreage of tobacco grown here this winter, and less effort and anxiety for a spring and summer crop, (the only crop that will materialize) than I ever knew.

There has been no plowing done, no oats or tobacco seed sown. The ground is badly washed and the fences all down if it was not for the stock law and possibly the dog law the prospect for a good crop would be entirely obscured.

On Saturday evening, March the 15th, the senior pupils of the Hamilton school, under the management of their efficient teacher, Miss Allie Carson, gave an entertainment consisting of songs, recitations, dialogues and tableaux. The pupils all acted their parts with honor to themselves and credit to their teacher. The programme was long and well selected. Among the many interesting features of the evening were a song by Mr. Willie Smith and Miss Eva Moore, Master Tommie Johnson, in "The Fortunate Mistake," a dialogue. Mr. Gus Carson in "Pumpkin Ridge," a dialogue Miss Lucy Kennedy, a recitation, "The Impossible woman," Miss Sallie Johnson, a recitation, "Blue Beard" and last but not least was the chip basket. The pupils all without exception performed their parts well and showed that they had been carefully drilled by their faithful teacher. "Credit to whom credit is due." We have had for the last three years a good school, and the progress of the scholars has been marked both in their studies and deportment. The school has been kept up under many discouraging and embarrassing circumstances, but little harmony in the district, and the burden of the school resting on the least appreciated, nevertheless through the indefatigable exertions of our teacher the school is still going on with the same success that has ever marked its progress. There is a fine field here for building up a good school, if all interested would give their influence and cooperation.

Bellevue.

H. C. Botts has returned from Bourbon county, where he has been buying tobacco.

The basket willows that were grown in the vicinity last year have been cut and ditched.

Our city fishermen, the Messrs. Smith, have been taking some fine fish out of their nets during the past week.

Rev. Moore, of Georgetown, the old school baptist, preached in the schoolhouse last Saturday night, and in the Baptist church Sunday afternoon.

Considerable land has been plowed here in the past week. Several of our early birds have been in the garden looking for worms, and some gardening has been done.

Scott Rice is still confined to the house where he has been for the past six months, suffering from a complication of diseases, and mostly from bright's disease.

Theodore Roberts and son, John, started for Arkansas a few days since where they intend farming the present season and prospect for a future home, when the remainder of his family will follow.

We learn that Steve Mock, of Rabbit Hash, has bought a lot in Maeville and contracted with the McMullen Bros., of that place, to put up a large store room on it for him. The work to begin at once.

A. H. Lerch, of Augusta, Ky., is visiting his friend, L. W. Kantz, the gentlemanly proprietor of the Maeville tobacco warehouse. J. B. Powers, of the Planters' Tobacco House, Cincinnati, spent several days here last week.

Our "law enforcer" it seems is afraid to come to town by the way of the public highway, on account of the herds of stock daily to be met upon them. Occasionally we see Uncle Tilford Sullivan bring a few of them in on a gallop.

Judging from the number of plant beds sown in our neighborhood, our farmers are expecting to set all their land with tobacco. With a favorable season a very large crop will be planted.

The very severe winter, through which we have passed, has proved an unusually hard one on stock, nearly all of which is quite low in flesh—some are poor. Lambs and pigs have suffered the most and a large per cent. of them was lost.

In passing around through this part of the country one is almost led to believe that the False Prophet and all his "Gipsies" have gone into camp here, so numerous are those white cotton canvasses over the many plant beds to be seen in the woods and thickets.

Since the spring like weather set in, we see considerable improvement going on in our little city. B. F. Corbin has put a new board fence around his premises; John Clore has weather-boarded and otherwise improved his residence; Mrs. Sallie Akin has put a new roof on her residence.

Another slow mail, last week. Hence our failure to reach the Recorder office in time for the last issue. The mail from Bellevue to Burlington is one of the vexatious mysteries to us. Only 7 miles between the two places, and, except by private carrier, mail matter from either place to reach the other has to pass through two States. Where is the fault, and where the remedy? Why not a letter, or a paper be two or three days in traveling from one office to the other?

Quite a large and interesting meeting was held in the school-house last Saturday week. A lively interest was manifested in building a wharf here, but as the river was too high to ascertain what condition the landing is in, or may be in when the water leaves it, it was agreed to appoint a committee of four to make the necessary examination as soon as practicable, and report at a call meeting. We are to judge the outcome by the interest taken in the meeting, Bellevue will not long be without a landing. As the project is one in which we are all more or less interested, we hope the matter will be discussed and agitated in a feeling and friendly spirit.

THE "NEW WILLIAM TELL."

The call-bell has rung and the curtain will rise,
And the boxes are full and the people applaud
The girl who plays there, in a page's disguise,
The public's last toy—to be hissed or encored,
(More red for her lips, she is tired),
Clapped, sneered at, run after, admired.
"The New William Tell" is the name of the play,
A capital farce, as the newspapers say.

One scene and her work will be over. She stands
Full in the glare of the flickering light;
It falls on her hair, and the ball in her hands,
Her lover is playing the hero to-night.
She smiles as he asks: "Are you ready?"
"Ay, sweetheart," she answers, "I'm steady."
And this is the very last night of the play
And he is the capital shot, as they say.

She smiles as she waits, for her thoughts have gone back
To a meadow all bright in the gay summer noon,
To a day when he came down the narrow green track,
And they met at the white gate, a year gone next June.
Sweet the scent of the ruddy clover!
Would that evening's work were over!
Oh, steady; hold steady! Ah! how the lights sway!
The best of the farce is the end of the play.

They are clapping her now as she raises the ball;
A hiss! Did he start? But the smoke comes between,
And the crowd hear the shot, and the crowd see her fall,
But the curtain rings down for the last final scene.
Ah, close in his arms she is lying,
She smiles as he kisses her, dying.
"The New William Tell" is the name of the play,
A capital farce, as the newspapers say.

"LOONEY SAL."

None of the inhabitants of the little town could tell why she was called "Looney Sal." It could not have been because of any mental defect, for none such was apparent in her.

She was born in one of the low board huts of Shippenville, which stood on the swampy outskirts of Hoboken, and excelled the other rattletraps in evidences of senile decay. These were inhabited by the lowest of low wretches, all vagabonds by trade or profession, as you will. No one asked her who her parents were, and had such an inquiry been made no one could have answered it.

"Granny Smith's Den," a low rum-hole, could hardly be called Sal's home—it was more of a place where she was allowed to exist in compensation for the fruits of her skill at petty larceny, the inevitable whenever she visited any of the mercantile establishments. At night she edified the gatherings at Granny Smith's by songs and dances, and the words of the former were usually indecent paraphrases of the popular songs of the day.

Her wakeful nights could not but produce extreme sleepiness during the day, and it was no rare occurrence to see Sal stretched in slumber on the open meadow for many hours during the afternoon. These odd habits, associated with the girl's other peculiarities, made her an object of curiosity as well as of dread to the school children. The younger ones, in obedience to their parents' commands made a wide circuit about the open space in which Sal spent her forenoons. The older ones were attracted to the spot—perhaps conscious of approaching independence, perhaps only because of the curious sight of the black-locked, dark-eyed girl as she lay stretched upon her "see-saw" and gently rocked it up and down, as she hummed some weird song. Whenever the boys came near enough to be noticed by her she frightened them off with fierce grimaces, which seemed to pursue them in their flight to the sound of almost maniacal laughter.

She had no friends or playmates. What girl would have selected her as a companion, she who associated only with those who shone as disreputable among the outcasts of Shippenville? Furthermore, her pugilistic prowess was as dreaded by the boys as was her scurrilous language by the girls.

Sometimes, but rarely, a boy who vaunted his bravery could be induced into coming within her reach, but then it was only through the process known to children as "daring." These efforts at a display of courage invariably produced a very subdued boy, whose face and garments could hardly be considered ornamental.

The "big boy" of the academy, Dick Allen, had "licked" all of his classmates but two or three, and Sal had conquered them. The other boys "dared" Dick to engage in combat with Sal, but he, prompted by a species of manliness, declined to fight a girl. On being greeted with the inharmonious chant of "fraid cat," "fraid cat," he astounded his companions by a proposition to secure the girl's friendship within half an hour. The doubts and deprecations which his playmates uttered stimulated him to proceed at once to Sal's sunny spot. Of course his "chum," Will Barry, went with him.

"Fellows, you could just see that he went 'cause he was dared," said Tom Sievers when he recounted his observations, taken from behind a large rock. "Will Barry played sharp; he just kept behind Dick, and Dick he marched right up to Looney Sal's see-saw, and if he did stand off—well, so far that she couldn't biff him in the eye—Dick he said: 'Hello, Sal.' And what do you think Sal did? I expected to see Dick mauled—just chewed up. An' all you fellows know I'm Dick's friend—"

"Oh, come now, Tom, give it to us straight," one of the boys interrupted the juvenile modern Minnesinger; "tell us what she did."

"Well, nothing," answered Tom. "She just stopped her see-saw, looked up at Dick just as if he was a cat or something; then she lay down agin, and and working her see-saw she went on singin': 'See saw, buck-a-me raw, folderol, dolderol, diedaw.' Say, fellows that girl kin sing. Golly, it just—"

"Oh Tom, you're just foolin'," his comrades cried; "tell us all about it."

"Well, ain't I tellin' yer? She just went on see-sawin' and singin' just as if there wasn't no Dick nor no Will. Then Will he gave Dick a shove to keep him from weakenin', and then Dick he sings out again: 'Helloh, Sal.' Then Sal, she took no notice of 'em again. Then Will, he said: 'Call her Loony Sal, why don't ye?' and then—"

Tom was not required to continue the tale. All of the scholars had seen the boys running, followed by Sal; they had observed her gleaming eyes; they had seen her agile body fly after them over stile and stone; and had seen them approach the school, pass over the threshold, rush up-stairs into the classroom, and there, before the very eyes of the teacher, she threw her offenders to the floor, and with each blow of her little clenched fist she hissed: "Who yer call looney? Who yer call looney, eh?"

As she struck them the other scholars jumped upon their seats to get a better view of the one-sided encounter, perhaps. They did not hear what the teacher said as he stooped over the strugglers and tore the girl from her passive, bewildered opponents. A dead silence reigned as he held the girl and gravely asked: "What have you done to the girl, you boys?"

And then—so the class supposed—he certainly must have whispered some severe threat to the wild girl. For what else could have so suddenly calmed her passionate rage? Sal, when he directed the question to the boys, raised her face to his with a curious mixture of searching doubt and astonishment, and when he said: "Come with me, girl," she followed him out of the class-room in the meekest possible manner.

When half an hour had elapsed he returned to the class-room and resumed his lessons, but his manner, ever kind as it was, seemed to have added to it an incomprehensible gravity, which appeared even sadness.

Sal did not go back to her hut, but walked to the back of the school and sat down on a block of stone. The day passed, yet she barely moved. None of the children stopped to see what had become of her; she heard them leave school, but did not stir. Evening came, a chilly raw evening. Sal drew her knees close to her body, wound her bare, bruised arms about them and crouched there a frowsy, uncanny creature.

—"Teacher says forgive them fellers and don't steal. He don't cuss me nor he don't call me Looney Sal, nuther. He sez Salrey—Salrey—ha, ha, ha! Me Sa'rey. Ha, ha, ha—"

Her laughter was interrupted by the coarse croak of Granny Smith's voice, which asked:

"Air ye crazy Sal?"

Granny Smith was an industrious person. While her soul-and-body destroying work at night would have more than justified her sleeping all day, she stole hours from her rest during which she stole all else that came within her reach, as she feigned to travel about in the guise of a rag-picker and beggar. Her way home this day led behind the school-house a belated "kept in" child might be there; it could be knocked down and robbed of a slate, if nothing else.

"What air ye doin' here?"

"Nawthin'," said Sal. Her defiant tone awakened the hag's ire. Her bony hands grasped and struck the girl, while her hoarse, guttural voice accompanied each blow with brief remarks, of which only the following will bear transcription: "Wagabone! Too lazy to dance, is yer? I'll learn ye, curse yer."

She helped Sal on to the shanty; kicks and blows and curses were the means employed. But they were of no avail; though the boisterous, drunken audience called for Sal, she refused to dance; and instead of her songs they heard heavy blows which fell upon a human body, but not a plaint was uttered. The assemblage were too low to even attempt a defense of the child.

Several days thereafter Sal's sea saw stood idle, and the store-keepers of Hoboken did not have to bewail the loss of any of their merchandise. Sal was not seen anywhere, and no one inquired about her.

The children as they went to school gave a glance at the sea-saw. Sal was not on it; nor the next day either. It would be fun, aye, quite brave to destroy the waif's only pleasure. The boy's who wrecked the see-saw did not feel quite manly when they did it, but they had heard their parents say it were well to eradicate the miscreants of Shippenville, to destroy every vestige of the settlement. And then the boys who made fire-wood of Sal's see-saw, all of them bore marks of blows inflicted by her. Revenge is sweet.

The scholars were assembled in the large class-room and sang their reverential morning hymn. The song ceased suddenly as a little, browned face appeared at one of the windows. A little tattered figure sat on the sill. "It's Looney Sal!" the children screamed. Mr. Shepherd quietly approached the window and lifted the sash, and at the same time the quaint little body disappeared. Sal slid down the lightning rod, which was within reach, and stood on the ground below. She looked anxiously up at the window she had so hurriedly left. The teacher evidently did not see her. He had hardly drawn in his head when she again climbed to the window. This time she need not press her face against the pane; the sash had not been closed. Her shadow fell upon the teacher's desk, but he appeared not to observe it. Sal cast a dubious glance at him, and then to sustain her anger threw a handful of small stones on the floor.

"Is that you, Sarah?" His tone expressed neither reproof nor surprise; it was a simple greeting. Sal might have expected this. She bent through the open window and laughed rudely. "I wur here before."

"Is that so?" He looked upon her as if her conduct were eminently proper. "Did you wish to come in?" he asked, invitingly.

Sal stared at him. Her defiant expression gave place to one of surprise.

"What—me?"

The teacher nodded.

"In thar?"

"Certainly, if you wish to."

She sprang through the window.

"Goin' to sing?" she asked, impudently.

The teacher nodded and continued to turn the leaves of his book without looking at her.

"Page thirty-eight," he called to the boys, and then handed the open book to the little guest.

"Will you sit down and sing with us?"

A peal of loud, coarse laughter was her only answer. As she laughed she struck her brown fists on her knees and rocked her body to and fro. As suddenly she ceased to laugh when she noticed the stern expression on the teacher's face. She hung her head, twisted her fingers about and scratched the floor with her feet in a most embarrassed manner.

"Can't read," she exclaimed, suddenly, as she looked into the teacher's face. He placed his hand on her bedraggled, unkempt head.

"That makes no difference, child; some of us here are not good readers—that is why I read each verse of the hymn before we sing it."

She silently accepted the little stool that was offered her, and sat ever so still, with downcast eyes, as if she would not interrupt the full, deep voice of the man who sang. And then the room resounded with the clear voices of the children, as they were lifted in tuneful prayer. Sal did not stir. When the song subsided the sudden stillness seemed to awaken Sal as if from a dream. The teacher thought her cheek was moist.

"Is there anything the matter with you, child?"

She shook her head, quietly returned the book to him, and approached the door.

"Kin I go out here?"

He opened the door.

"Did you like our song, Sarah?"

The habitually aggressive face looked piteous, and her great dark eyes glimmered. They were suffused with tears. She rapidly brushed the back of her hand over her eyes and ejaculated: "Them fellers busted my see-saw. I cum here to bust them."

As harsh as her words were they conveyed an explanation for her presence in which the child—perhaps unconsciously—expressed regret for her evil intention.

* * * * * * *

The streets were still and deserted. The peaceful little city seemed to have gone asleep with all its inhabitants; only Granny Smith's Den was illumined by a solitary dip-light. A few ruffians were discussing one of those plans, the execution of which had given Shippenville its merited disrepute. Sal lay crouched upon a bundle of ill-smelling straw, asleep perhaps.

"The first of the month," growled the old hag. "The kids bring the school money. Two dollars each of 'em. Makes near three hundred dollars. Now's your chance. Send Sal up the lightnin' rod, and have her drop the rope-ladder. Shorty gits up an' then—well, let's take a drink first."

She placed a bottle of vile whisky to her lips, and passed it to Dan, the pickpocket, the least valiant of the lot. Shorty took the bottle next, and, with a "here's luckin at ye," would have drained it had not the old woman snatched it from him, exclaiming:

"Hold on! No gittin' drunk aforehand."

Sal knew that she had to take part in robbing the schoolmaster's monthly receipts. She arose rapidly and attempted to glide out of the room. Shorty and Granny Smith grabbed her, and the old beldam croaked:

"Was goin' to skip, was yer? I knowed it, ye peacher. You're in love with him, is yer? clean gone, hey? Was goin' to slide out an' give us away, ye daisy? Thet's the thanks we gets for feedin' ye, ye cat. I'll learn ye—"

"Hol' on, Granny," said Dan, the pickpocket, whose libations had stimulated him into a species of judgment; "stop beatin' an' cursin' of her now; when we've made the riffle kill her if it suits ye; nobody'll care."

The old hag swore that she would, and kicked the girl into the street. She continued to thump and kick her until the party arrived at the academy; then she gave her a rope ladder, and, as she ordered the child to climb up the lightning-rod, hissed:

"Git up to the winder, open it and fasten the hooks into the sill. If ye makes the littlest noise to give us away, Shorty'll be up after yer and he'll cut out yer lights and his'n too. Find the money an' nobody won't get hurt."

The child's hard face looked uneasy in the moonlight. In a trice she was on the sill, had opened the window, fastened the hooks, and dropped the ladder. Shorty was with her in a moment. They passed through the schoolroom into the teachers' sleeping apartment. Sal did not look at the man; the excitement of the adventure made the theft more attractive to her than all others had been. She found the cash-box and exultingly clasped it to her breast.

"Thou shalt not steal—forgive those who sin against thee," murmured the teacher in his sleep.

Shorty clapped his hand on Sal's mouth and stifled the cry she was about to utter. He grasped her and quickly dragged her from the room.

When they returned to the window he released her.

"Yelp now, ye pup, an' I'll go back an' cut his throat."

Sal stood back as if to allow him to descend first. "Not much, ye devil—you go first. I ain't goin' to leave yer here to yell."

Sal crawled toward the ground. Shorty followed, the frail ladder swinging and threatening to break. "Hurry down, ye cat," said Shorty, when they were about midway between the window and earth. Below stood Granny Smith and Dan; above her Shorty, with his brightly gleaming knife. Her time had come; she would not steal from the only being that had ever spoken a kind word to her. Before her intent could be understood she had run up to Shorty, wrenched the knife from his hand, and cut one side of the rope ladder. "Help! murder! thieves!" she screamed.

The instinct of self-preservation caused her to cling to the ladder, but the weight being thrown on one hook alone it tore through the wood of the sill and—a groan, a crash—and Shorty and Sal lay on the street. He shivered, seemed to choke and gurgle. Shorty was before a higher Judge than ever passed sentence on him on earth.

The noise had attracted a few belated wayfarers, and a moment later the schoolmaster came out with a lantern.

"What is the matter?" He saw the bodies. "Are they badly hurt?"

Some one answered: "Shippenville thieves. Good for them. Why, here's Looney Sal—got her deserts at last."

"Oh, no; I am sure she did not intend any wrong," said the teacher, as he lifted her little head. She looked at him with a smile, and when his expression assured her that she would be believed, gasped: "Teacher—I wouldn't hook, nothin'—from—yer—yer is good to me—"

"Don't speak, poor child. I know you would not." He looked upon her suffering, quivering form.

"I'd like ter go ter school," she breathed. He took her in his arms and carried her into the same class-room into which she had intruded but a few days before.

"Had we not better send for a surgeon?" asked one of the good-natured neighbors whom the noise had attracted.

"Too late, my friend," said the teacher; "the end is approaching."

"Ain't—der—goin'—der—be—no—singin'?" Sal sighed. Immediately the young man's voice, strong and full, rose in the hymn of praise that the class had sung the morning that Sal first went to school. She faintly sung the melody with him, and toward the end of the song her voice grew fainter and fainter until it was reduced to a mere whisper.

"Sarah—poor child!" The young man bent over her as he anxiously called her. She opened her eyes and smiled at him.

"More singin'," she gasped. He complied with her request in a choked voice. And as the glimmering dawn came in through the window the bruised little body moved no more. In silence the teacher arose and reverently brushed back the matted locks from poor Sal's little face, which smiled peacefully in death.—N. Y. Graphic.

THE DAIRY.

—Cows that have not wintered well need a little extra care just now. A warm bran slop, with a little ginger, fed daily will produce wonderful results.

—The causes of salvy butter are over-churning, either at too high or too low a temperature, over-working and handling it any time when it is too warm. Salvy butter is butter in which the "grain" is destroyed by these or any other errors in manufacture. Butter that has lost its "grain" is greatly reduced in grade, even if in every other way perfect. "Salvy" and "waxy" are opposites in the texture of butter.

—One of the recent inventions for protecting milk from contamination while being drawn from the cow is a pail with a cover, through which two rubber funnels with long nickel tubes are passed. The milk is drawn from the teats into these funnels, and all hairs, dust, dandruff and dried excrement are entirely excluded.

—If you do not get as good a price for your butter as some one else does, you may count that there are nine chances out of ten that the fault lies with you and not with the purchaser, remarks an exchange. Really, choice butter is not so plenty but that any one who makes a really first-class article can easily obtain the highest market price. It is very natural for one to think that their butter is just as good as their neighbor's, but if the neighbor's brings a higher price it will pay to try and improve the quality a little.—Western Rural.

—Until the best quality of well-bred dairy stock can be generally introduced, says Charles F. Mills, much can be done by the dairymen of Illinois to increase the average profits on each cow by the adoption of a standard as to the quality and minimum yield of milk that each cow must produce to retain her place in the dairy. The adoption of a system of testing each cow in the dairies of this State and the slaughter of such as were found unprofitable would make a radical change for the better and largely increase the revenues of our dairymen.

—Milch cows due to calve soon should receive more care now than heretofore. Extra rations of wholesome food with good shelter and pure water is very important and necessary. Bran fed now will have the tendency to increase the milk flow when the cow comes in, and should be given regularly each day. During the warm days of the approaching spring a run in some high, dry lot or field is desirable. Do not try to force your young heifers with overfeeds of rich food. Many a promising young animal has been ruined in this way by parties caring more for an abundant and unnatural yield of milk than for the health of their animals.

—Skill in preparing the package, so that the flavor of the wood shall not be communicated to the butter, is an essential qualification for butter-making. A thorough soaking in pure brine is the most common means of doing this. Some are successful in and prefer preparing the tub by a careful rubbing of the inside of the tub with moist salt. Others have practiced subjecting the tub to the fumes of burning sulphur. Still others have had good success in box butter by lining the boxes with a tasteless paper made from poplar or bass-wood pulp. By some means the "taste of the wood" must be avoided, for hardly anything is more objected to by purchasers, and all butter having a suspicion even of this taste will be graded very low, and be extremely difficult of sale. A thorough saturation of the wood of the tub with salt, either by soaking or rubbing, has always been followed by satisfactory results.

Value of Frequent Milkings.

The influence of the frequency with which milking is practiced during a period of twenty-four hours, both upon the animal and upon the milk, has been extensively discussed, and still remains far from being settled. Whatever may throw light upon it, or furnish facts that may find practical application on the farms, must be received with gratification on every hand. The results of the experiments of Frienmeyer will therefore be considered with no little interest by those engaged in the dairy industries.

This able investigator made a series of experiments and observations with milking and feeding to determine, first, the influence of the feed, and, second, the influence of the frequency of milking or the time intervening between the several milkings upon the quality of the product. Contrary to an opinion accepted to no small extent, he concludes from the first part of his work that the quantity of milk produced depends not only upon the activity of the glands, but upon the quantity and quality of food administered as well. When the animals are subject to three daily milkings, that drawn in the morning is greater in volume but poorer in the valuable constituents, especially fat, than that drawn at other times. This is accounted for by the longer time intervening between the milkings. The milk drawn at midday is richest in fat, and is therefore preferable to that drawn at other times.

The whole subject is worthy of further and more thorough examination than it has already received, and there will doubtless be found in it much of interest and value for dairymen of every class.—Chicago Tribune.

It Doesn't Keep.

Perfectly pure butter will keep a very long time, like pure lard or pure tallow, but no butter is made, or can be made perfectly pure, without destroying the grain by melting it. As turned out by the best makers it still contains some of the other elements of the milk, its sugar or caseine, incorporated with it. But to have as little of these in our butter as possible is essential to even moderately long keeping. Salt will not save butter containing much of them. In fact, any butter will keep as long without salt as with any amount of it that can be used and leave the butter marketable. Salt is put into butter for flavor, and not for keeping. When butter is made from perfect cream and churned, washed, worked and packed as perfectly as possible, it is in the best condition for keeping. But however perfectly manufactured, long keeping can only be secured afterward by careful handling, ever remembering that butter at the best has always in it germs of decay which high temperature and exposure to the air will surely develop. For the foreign trade, especially to warm countries, carefully made butter, closely packed and sealed in air-tight and non-absorbent packages, ought to and undoubtedly will command very high prices. But only a thoroughly skilled maker should attempt this.—T. H. Hoskins, M. D., in Mirror and Farmer.

Art Frauds in Paris.

A well-known Paris picture dealer has published an interesting and useful pamphlet on "Sham Old Masters." He says that the commonest mode of counterfeiting an old picture is to cover a new one—painted, of course, for the purpose—with a certain transparent paste, which when exposed to slight artificial heat, cracks and becomes brown. If a sufficiently venerable tint has not been produced, the canvass is washed with a mixture of lamp-black and licorice-juice. The picture is next exposed for some hours to the smoke of a wood fire, and the loose soot having been brushed away, is rubbed here and there with a rag which has been dipped in very dilute sulpheric acid. This operation gives a moldy appearance to those parts which have been touched. The work is finally sprinkled by means of a tooth brush and a hairpin with minute spots of a solution of sepia of gum water, to imitate fly-specks, and it is then ready for the market. Signatures are imitated by experts who are know as monogrammistes, and who devote their exclusive attention to such matters, and one of these men, who died recently and was known to the author of the pamphlet, confessed to the forgery of no fewer than 11,000 signatures of the Italian masters alone, and said that he had for years made a large income by the exercise of his art.—St. James Gazette.

—Whatever may have been the failures of Edward Payson Weston on the sawdust ring, he deserves some sort of credit for covering more ground straight away than any other pedestrian. His 1,200-mile walk from Portland, Me., to Chicago, was virtually the beginning of pedestrianism in this country. He has now in England successfully completed 5,000 miles in 100 days, under the auspices of the temperance people, who employed him to disseminate their principles, and at the same time to illustrate that physical endurance is greater when stimulants are not used.—Chicago Journal.

—Lord Fairfax is a physician, and lives in the United States. He is the only nobleman who is a doctor, the professions of medicine and surgery being, for some reason, rather looked down upon socially in England. Lord Carnarvon's brother, the Hon. Allan Herbert, is, however, a physician. But he, like the other, is said to find it more congenial to reside abroad, and lives in Paris, where he practices his profession.—N. Y. Times.

—William H. Kirk, of Cincinnati, was some months since killed in his stable with a hammer. His corpse was robbed of $100 in money and dumped into Mill Creek. Joe Palmer and William Berner confessed the crime, and at the trial of the latter he testified that while he did not strike the blow, he looked on and shared in the money obtained. The jury convicted him of manslaughter, for which they were hooted by the crowd.—Chicago Times.

—It is not at all nice in "fashionable private families" any more to call the upstairs girl a "chambermaid." She must be referred to and designated as the "maid," and if your folks have ever been to England you must call her by her surname, as "Dusenbury," "Mulcahey" or "Murphy." In these days things like this are worth remembering.—Rochester Express.

—Dr. Edward Lasker was fond of writing epigrams. Here is one written when a student:

An advocate of mighty size:
Was 'gainst a small one pitted,
"Ho," said the large one, full of scorn,
"You're for my pocket fitted."
"Granted," the little one replied,
"Then would the news be spread,
More knowledge in your pocket's hid
Than's stored within your head."

—A newspaper in Paris has been sued for damages for printing a portrait of a countess which did not look like her.

From Head to Foot.

The postmaster at North Buffalo, Pa., Mr. M. J. Green, says St. Jacobs Oil, the great pain-conqueror, cured him of pains in the head, and also of frosted feet.

WE know nothing, and yet it is knowing something to know that you know nothing.

Don't Give It Up So.

"Oh! if I had only known that in time." Known what? "Known that a simple cold in the head may develop into chronic Catarrh." Well, it isn't too late, for Ely's Cream Balm will cure catarrh even after the sufferer's life has become a burden to him, and he a nuisance to his friends. It is the only radical and thoroughly scientific catarrh cure known. Not a snuff. Not a liquid. Applied to the nostrils with the finger. Price fifty cents.

IT only takes about two seconds to get up a duel.—N. O. Picayune.

TWO MONTHS ago my attention was called to the case of a woman afflicted with a cancer on her shoulder at least 5 inches in circumference, angry, painful, and giving the patient no rest day or night for 6 months. I obtained a supply of Swift's Specific for her. She has taken 5 bottles, and the ulcer is entirely healed up, only a very small scab remaining, and her health is better than for 5 years past; seems to be perfectly cured. REV. JESSE H. CAMPBELL, Columbus, Ga.

TRUE SOLDIERLY GRIT.

Having Passed Through the War an Old Soldier Conquers one Enemy More.

Kindling with enthusiasm as he recalled the great struggle of twenty years ago, Captain J. R. Sanford, of Newark, who raised Company B of 33d N. J. Zouaves, and went to the front with them, said to a transient companion one day last summer:

"Yes, I was in eight of the fiercest battles of the war; Seven Pines, Malvern Hill, Savage Station, Missionary Ridge and Harrison's Landing are in the list. I started to go with Sherman to the sea, but my right leg was shattered by a ball at the first engagement after the great march began. After the amputation I was taken twenty-five miles and left in a tent at Ringgold, Ga. A rain came on and my tent was flooded. Then I was started on my way to Chattanooga, 280 miles distant. Just try to imagine the horror of that journey to a man in my condition. For years afterward I was shaken with every exertion. Yes, the doctors prescribe, as they always will when you ask them, but I keep my own doctor now, and he never opens his month."

"A dumb doctor?" exclaimed the Captain's caller.

"Yes, dumb as a mummy, but smart as lightning there he is," pointing to a bottle of DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY standing on a corner shelf, "I take that. When I am run down it winds me up; when I am weak it strengthens me; when I am 'off my food' it gives me an appetite; when I am excited it quiets me."

POTASH

Iodide of Potassium is one of the strongest of the minerals used in medicine, and has produced much suffering in the world. Taken for a long time and in large doses, it dries up the gastric juices, impairs digestion, the stomach refuses food, and the patient declines in health and weight. Persons with Blood or Skin Diseases should be careful how they take these mineral poisons, as in most instances the effect of them is to almost permanently impair the constitution. Swift's Specific is entirely a vegetable preparation, and it is easy to convince you of its merit.

I have cured permanently Blood Taint in the third generation by the use of Swift's Specific, after I had most signally failed with Mercury and Potash.

VAST FOREST FIRES.

North and South Carolina Pineries Falling Before the Flames.

Houses, Barns and Other Property Devoured by the Seething Element, Impelled by the Winds–Many Homeless, but no Lives Lost.

RALEIGH, N. C., April 4.—For three days and nights the most destructive fires ever known have been devastating the southern border of the State, extending into six or seven counties. Vast forests of long leaf pine were attacked. These form the chief source of the timber supply. High winds fanned the flames into fury. Hundreds of thousands of trees have been burned, and some of the largest turpentine orchards in the State ruined. Many farm-houses are destroyed. The people are bravely fighting the fire. A number of towns narrowly escaped destruction. At Manly, on the Raleigh and Augusta Railway, a number of houses were burned. Large stores of lumber and railroad ties on the line of the road were also burned. A dozen turpentine distilleries were ruined. The country in great stretches is but a blackened wilderness. The extent of the disaster is not yet known or fully realized. Many families are homeless. The fire swept fifty miles in one direction, and thirty in another. The fire was caused by burning brush. A high wind drove the sparks into the turpentine woods. The fires extended far into South Carolina, on the line of the Charlotte, Columbia and Augusta Railroad. Trains have been running through miles of fire. A number of dwellings and eight or ten barns were burned in that district. So far as now known no lives have been lost.

An Enterprising Ghost.

BALTIMORE, MD., April 4.—The pretty little town of Westernport, in Western Maryland, on the Potomac River, opposite Piedmont, is greatly excited over a bold "spook" which has suddenly made its appearance in the town, and insists on stalking the streets at night, greatly to the terror of the inhabitants, who will not stir out of their houses after dark since the appearance of the specter. It was first seen about a week ago by a party of citizens on their way home late from a festivity. It rose up, they said, directly in their path, which so disconcerted them that, taking to their heels, they fled precipitately. The news spread and the following night it frightened a man into a fit at the opposite end of the town, where first seen. It does not seem to confine itself to any one spot. Although universally believed to be some practical joker masquerading, still no one has had courage enough so far to try to capture it. Night before last a party of men went out armed, gunning for the goblin. They failed to find it, but later it appeared to one of the hunters in a lonely spot and frightened him so badly that he'll have malaria for a month. It has badly frightened the police. Officer Patrick was detailed to work the case up. Donning woman's attire, he sallied forth, and coming unexpectedly across the ghost in a lonely spot, he lost his courage, making a ludicrous flight in his petticoats, which so hampered his movements, that when he reached the station house the clothing was most dilapidated.

Wanted, Heirs of Helen Blake.

NEW YORK, April 4.—James Usher, a Murray street claim agent, has undertaken to discover heirs-at-law of Helen Blake, nee Sheridan, who died in England in 1876, leaving an estate valued at $2,000,000. "Mrs. Blake," said Mr. Usher to-day, "was the widow of a Dublin stationer, named Welsh. In 1819, she married General Rob't W. Blake. The match was opposed by General Blake's father, and consequently, when General Blake died in 1850, he left his entire fortune to his wife, stipulating that none of his own relatives should have any portion of it. Among those who have responded to Mr. Usher's circular are George R. Sheridan, who claims that the dead woman was a cousin of his father. Miss Belle Sheridan, of Oswego, is also a claimant, and many others have expressed a willingness to be."

A Painful Operation.

JACKSON, MICH., April 4.—Hon. E. W. Barber, reading clerk of the House of Representatives during the thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth and fortieth sessions of Congress, and Third Assistant Postmaster General under General Grant, this morning submitted to an amputation of his right leg below the knee, to secure relief from an ulcer of the bone, from which he suffered for many years. The operation was successfully performed, and at 9 o'clock this evening he was resting comfortably.

Paymaster Broadhead Dead.

WASHINGTON, April 4.—The War Department is informed that Paymaster J. A. Broadhead died at Boston yesterday, of a sudden attack of pneumonia. Paymaster Broadhead recently became insane on account of troubles arising from theft of Government money in his charge, and has just reached home from his station at Tucson.

Illness of John Bright.

LONDON, April 3.—John Bright is ill. He has been confined to his room for several days with an affection of the lungs, which it is feared will develop into something more serious. This morning there was slight congestion, causing considerable anxiety.

Death From Trichinosis.

LATROBE, PA., April 3.—Mrs. Galla and daughter, two victims of trichinosis, at Loyalhanna, Pa., died this morning, and the father and another daughter are not expected to recover.

Death of Alf. Burnett.

CINCINNATI, April 4.—Alf. Burnett, the celebrated humorist and comedian, died suddenly at his residence on David street this morning of apoplexy. He was born in England in 1825, and came to this country when eight years of age.

Barbed Wire Going Up.

CHICAGO, April 3.—A meeting of the barbed wire manufacturers here to-day advanced the price of wire 10 per cent. This is the second advance within sixty days. An advance of half a cent a pound was made at St. Louis recently.

Steamer Burned.

COLUMBUS, GA., April 3.—The steamer Rebecca Everingham, Captain George Whiteside, burned this morning to the water's edge at Fitzgerald Landing, Chattahoochee River, forty miles below this city. The fire originated in the stern of the steamer, and, it is thought, from electric lamp sparks. The passengers saved escaped in their night clothes. Three hundred and seven bales of cotton and a small miscellaneous freight burned. The boat was valued at $24,000 and is a total loss; no insurance. There were sixteen cabin and nine deck passengers on board. The steamer belonged to the Central Line, and plied the Chattahoochee River between this city and Apalachacola Bay. The passengers who escaped have reached this city, some of them severely burned. Of the thirty passengers, thirteen are dead and missing.

Attempt on a Prison.

LONDON, April 4.—The following particulars have been learned concerning the plot to blow up Mount Joy Prison. The Invincibles in the prison were engaged in a clandestine correspondence with conspirators on the outside. Letters were found in James Mallet's cell which disclosed the plot. The prison wardens were to be bribed with money from O'Donavan Rossa's fund to convey an infernal machine into the prison. One letter contained an order for the murder of Patrick Delaney, one of the Phœnix Park conspirators, by throwing him over the balcony as he should leave the prison after mass. Delaney still remains at Mount Joy for safety. Many wardens have been dismissed.

German Traveler Murdered.

WARRENBURG, MO., April 3.—On Monday the body of a man, mangled by a train, was found on the railroad track. It now appears that the deceased was Carl Steidle, supposed from Erie, Pa., traveling westward. At Sedalia, Mo., he fell in with a young man named Hamilton. The latter telegraphed to his brother to meet them at Warrenburg. There the brothers enticed Steidle to the outskirts of the town and murdered and robbed him, and placed the body on the track. The Hamiltons were to-day arrested and are now in jail. They have confessed the crime, which was of a most brutal nature. The feeling is intense against them, and threats of lynching are heard.

Four Men Killed.

SCRANTON, PA., April 3.—Of a party of seven Hungarians who were walking on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad at Dunmore this afternoon, four were killed and two dangerously hurt. They were in search of work, and were on their way to Scranton. They stepped from one track to another to avoid a coal train going toward Scranton. They did not notice that a train was approaching from behind on account of the noise made by the trains. The engineer was unable to apprise them of their danger. One of the injured men had an arm torn from its socket. Those who were killed were cut in pieces.

American Bible Society Work.

NEW YORK, April 4.—At the meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society for foreign work, society appropriations for the coming year were made to the amount of $109,640. Grants of books were made for benevolent distribution in this and other lands, the aggregate value of which was about $12,859. Two Bible Societies in Nebraska and one in Mississippi were recognized as auxiliaries. Heavy Snow at Ottawa, O.

OTTAWA, OHIO, April 3.—Snow commenced at eight o'clock yesterday morning and came down steadily without intermission until nine o'clock in the evening, when it ceased; but the ground being soaked with rain, which had previously fallen, it was absorbed as fast as it fell, although about twelve inches of snow descended during the day. LAKE ACCIDENT.

Three Men Killed Outright and Three Badly Injured.

The Boiler of the Tug Peter Smith Explodes on Lake Erie–A Sad Affair.

CLEVELAND, O. April 6.—Last night the tug Peter Smith left this port on her first trip of the season. She was bound for Toledo and had in tow two barges, both lighters. The tug was manned by a double crew of six men, consisting of Captain John Hobson, Assistant Captain Tom Deweger, First Engineer John Perew, Second Engineer James Kodew, and Dennis and John Sullivan, deck hands. Captain Smith, who is the master of the schooner Sherman, accompanied the crew to aid them in piloting her safely up the Maumee River and into the harbor of Toledo. The lake was inclined to be heavy, and a strong breeze was blowing from the southwest, which sent the lighter along smoothly. About midnight, when the tug and the tow reached a point six miles out, and a short distance this side of Black River, her engines began working badly and her boilers were evidently suffering from some untold injury. The tug from this time onward proceeded along slowly, and by daylight had advanced but a few miles. At 7 o'clock she reached Black River and headed toward Vermillion, where a landing was to be made. Shortly after this a terrible explosion was heard by the residents of both Black River and Vermillion. A cloud of black smoke could be seen on the lake about three miles out, and with this as an objective point the tug Telephone, which was lying at the Vermillion docks, steamed out into the lake. The two barges were met drifting toward the shore, and shortly afterward what remained of the tug Peter Smith was reached. On the wreck were discovered four men, some of them badly injured, and those were taken aboard the Telephone by her crew. The other three men were either killed outright or drowned, as their bodies could not be found. The names of the lost are as follows: John Perew, first engineer, of Cleveland; Captain Smith, who acted as pilot formerly of Buffalo, James Kodew, second engineer, of Cleveland. The injured are: Captain Tom Deweger, badly bruised and scalded. Dennis Sullivan, of Cleveland, slightly hurt. John Sullivan, of Cleveland, slightly hurt. Captain Hobson escaped without a scratch. The tug was valued at eight thousand dollars, and was rebuilt and new boilers placed in her only last summer at a cost of $3,000.

Growth of the Mormon Church.

SALT LAKE, April 6.—In the Mormon conference yesterday the usual statistical reports were made showing the growth of the church, and its increasing strength in Idaho, Colorado, and Arizona. President John Taylor said he was ready to read the financial report, but did not propose to do so publicly, as it would furnish ammunition for the enemies of the church, and material which they would use to misrepresent. Thereupon Geo. Q. Cannon moved to refer the report to the secret auditing committee, which was carried without a dissenting vote. Eighty-two missionaries were detailed to go to Great Britian, Scandinavia, the United States, the Southern States, New Zealand, Sandwich Islands, and other countries. More will be detailed to-morrow.

Several marvelous escapes were made. The fire alarm sounded, and those of the inmates who had not already escaped were taken out of the ruins by the firemen.

—It is said that the chestnut is fast becoming a thing of the past, and a medical authority claims that its disappearance is a fixed process of evolution. It says: "The chestnut tree is going, just as all trees of a spongy, inferior fiber must go before such stout, close-fibered trees as the oak. In prehistoric times the earth was covered with a rank, quick growth that yielded as the ages went on to the compacter and stouter trees. It is in the operation of the same law that the chestnut is doomed."—Chicago Herald.

XLVIIIth CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, April 2.—SENATE.—The Chair laid before the Senate the credentials of Henry B. Payne, Senator-elect from Ohio. These credentials were transmitted, owing to an informality in the credentials first presented. The Senate passed a bill referring to the Court of Claims the claim of William G. Ford, of Memphis, for the proceeds of fifty bales of cotton, seized by the United States in Alabama in 1865. Also, a bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to John P. Walworth $2,820, the proceeds of the sale, by order of General Banks, of certain funds of the Louisiana Bank, of New Orleans, in 1863. Also a bill to increase the efficiency of the General Land Office. Also, Mr. Morrill's bill for the improvement of coinage. The education bill was then taken up, and during the discussion the point was raised and agreed to by Mr. Blair, that the words "not sectarian in character" be stricken from the bill. After an executive session, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—The House then went into committee of the whole on the Indian Appropriation Bill. Mr. Ellis briefly explained the provisions of the bill. He said there was but little new legislation in the bill, but one provision was incorporated appropriating $5,000 for the detection and prosecution of men who surreptiously sell whisky to Indians. This, he considered, a very important feature of the bill, and it was earnestly urged by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Another item of general legislation was one requiring each Indian agent to submit the annual census of the Indians at his agency. This information would prove of great value to future appropriation committees in making provision for schools and school houses. He believes Indians should be given standing in courts, so they could enforce performance of contracts, and that, in course of time, they should be raised to the dignity of citizenship. Indians at present did not feel any interest in the Government; and he did not wonder at it after the hundred years of dishonor which had characterized its action towards them. Mr. Throckmorton argued in favor of giving the civilized Nations a territorial government and delegate in the House, and granting land in severalty to the heads of families in other tribes, and giving them a patent to the same when they showed a disposition to remain on the land and cultivate it. The bill was read by paragraphs for amendment. Mr. Throckmorton offered an amendment striking out the clause appropriating $12,500 for the pay of five Indian Inspectors, and inserting a proviso that the Secretary of War shall detail five officers, not under the grade of captain in the army, as Indian Inspectors. The committee rose and the House took a recess. When the House reassembled, the Speaker laid before it a message from the President, recommending the appropriation of $100,000 for the protection of levees on the lower Mississippi River. Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, April 3.—SENATE.—Bills were reported favorably and placed on the calendar as follows: For the erection of a public building at Sacramento; to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a free bridge over the Cumberland River at Nashville, to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri, at White Cloud, Kansas. Senate then took up the Education Bill.

A resolution was reported from the Committee on Accounts authorizing the employment in the Doorkeepers' Department of the House of a force of laborer's to fold speeches, which gave rise to some discussion. Adopted. The morning hour was dispensed with, and the House went into Committee of the Whole.

Also, from the Chicago Trade and Labor Assembly protesting against the repeal of the present patent laws. To authorize the appointment and retirement of wounded and disabled officers of the regular army, honorably discharged, under the act of July 15, 1870. Mr. Jonas submitted a joint resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Improvement of the Mississippi making an appropriation of $100,000 for the protection of existing levees in the Lower Mississippi. The Education Bill was then taken up and Mr. Baynrd addressed the Senate.

HOUSE.—Mr. Anderson, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas. House calendar. The morning hour was dispensed with and the House went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Wellborn in the chair, on the Indian Appropriation Bill. Consideration of the bill having been concluded, the committee rose and the bill passed. The House went into Committee of the Whole (Mr. Cox of New York in the chair) on the private calendar. Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, April 5.—SENATE.—A bill was reported favorably providing for the erection of public buildings at Springfield and Dayton, O., and placed on the calendar. After action on some other matters the education bill was again taken up and discussed by Messrs. Morgan and Hoar principally.

HOUSE.—The Agricultural appropriation bill was passed with slight amendment. The House next took up for consideration the bill forfeiting the Oregon Central land grant. The matter went over. Senate amendments were concurred in to the House bill making it a felony for a person falsely and fraudulently to assume or pretend to be an officer or employee acting under authority of the United States, or any department thereof. The Speaker laid before the House a communication from the Attorney General, addressed to Mr. Randall, submitting an estimate of deficiencies in appropriations for U. S. Courts of $375,000.

A Spiritualist Mobbed.

BRADFORD, PA., April 6.—A spiritualistic entertainment was given at the opera house this evening by John Davenport. After a few simple acts, lasting but a few moments, Davenport announced that owing to the noise of the audience the performance was over. Of nearly a thousand people in the house, some 400 rushed for the stage door, avowing their intention of assaulting Davenport. He escaped by the back entrance, but was chased up Main street by the mob. He reached his hotel and shelter, however, before the mob could catch him. The mob did not disperse until nearly midnight, and threatened to watch Davenport's departure from the city.

A motion to return the resolution to the Senate was adopted. A large number of local bills were passed. Miscellaneous Items.

SUSAN TEAL, a young woman of the Polksville neighborhood, near Owingsville, was handling a pistol, a few days since, when she carelessly put it into her dress pocket cocked. Forgetting it, she sometime afterward struck it against a chair-round, and it discharged, the bullet striking just above her knee-cap and coming out on the other side. The wound is painful and perhaps dangerous.

THE DAIRY.

—Pleas in behalf of the common cow grow in number and earnestness. Give her a chance. Pet her, feed her well, be as particular with her as with a costly Jersey or Friesian, and see if she will not respond handsomely. That is the current talk, and there's a good deal in it.—N. Y. Examiner.

—We are happy to see that some dairymen are beginning to think for themselves. At a meeting of the Delaware County Dairymen Mr. Gilchrist said: "The man that makes more butter by feeding makes better butter. I have seen cows' milk churned separately, and I know that the cow that made the best butter made the most."—American Dairyman.

—In response to an inquiry the New York Times says: "Holstein cattle are red and white, that is, the real cattle of Holstein. There are no true Holstein cattle in this country. Those called Holstein are really Holland or Dutch cattle, and are black and white spotted or pied. It would be just as reasonable to call a Chinaman a German as to call Dutch cattle Holstein. But yet it is done, and it makes a good deal of confusion."

—According to the best evidence obtainable on the subject there is more profit to the dairyman in medium and small cattle than in larger ones. Those who are now advocating the general purpose cow, claim that she must be large in order to make good paying beef. For our part we cannot see why a large steer is any more profitable than a small one. Each animal sells by the pound and eats according to his size. Cuts from the carcass of large animals cost no more in market than cuts from small ones.—The Dairyman.

—Cows sometimes catch cold in one or more sections of the udder that swell up and inflame badly, but do not gather and break. When the swelling goes down that part of the udder will probably go dry, but in many such cases, where no structural damage is done, at the next calving the udder will come all right again. We have had this happen many times, though we would not hope for it to the extent of buying a cow with such an udder before calving, because it is impossible from examination to tell how much damage has been done.—Agricultural Exchange.

—Cream from unsound milk, cream that has been long in rising, cream that has been kept too long after skimming—none of these can be made into first-rate butter by any skill in churning or after treatment. But good cream will give pale and spongy butter if churned at too high a temperature. Butter will come all the way up to seventy degrees, and even a little higher in winter, but it will be poor; and, further than this, if cream is churned six or eight hours and the butter has not come because the cream is imperfect or the temperature is wrong, though the temperature may then be rectified and the butter brought, the product will be inferior in color, texture of flavor, and generally in all three. It has been so hurt by over-churning that it can never be restored to anything like excellence.—Cor. Mirror and Farmer.

—The question of cow feed is always an interesting one, especially that of producing green or succulent food in winter. It is this that has created so much interest in ensilage and formerly occupied the attention of dairymen in regard to root growing. An article, cut, we think, from the Weekly Times, has a tone highly eulogistic of the pumpkin in this connection. It thinks thirty or forty tons of pumpkins can be grown on a single acre, and they are more valuable than roots or ensilage ton for ton. The same care devoted to the preservation of those crops will save the pumpkins. On this point we are a little skeptical, for in our experience this fruit is very liable to rot unless kept in a cool, dry cellar, where the temperature never goes down to the freezing point. Cows are very fond of them, however, and they tend to color the butter.—American Dairyman.

—It is quite common for those who write upon the subject of feeding cows to warn everybody not to keep the cows too long upon a single diet, but to change the food as often as practical. This is probably a mistake. Cows are to a great extent creatures of habit, and our own experience has led us to believe that any interruption in the regular method of feeding has been the occasion of loss in the milk yield. The aforesaid writers have probably got their ideas of change and variety mixed. While cows demand a variety of feed for the largest milk yield they are never anxious for a change. To speak more by the card, a cow should receive a variety of feed during the day, but any change of feed should be brought about quite gradually. A little at first and the ration increased as she shows a liking for it, and if it is something she is very fond of the more precaution is necessary to keep her from over-feeding with it. This is the point in feeding that requires skill and patience.—Exchange.

—Professor Knapp, in speaking of the calf before the Illinois Dairymen's Association, said: If little grass and hay, and considerable corn, be fed during the first year, a limited capacity of the stomach will very naturally be developed and a tendency to thrive only under grain conditions. Such an animal is a poor grazer and a light hay feeder. Upon the other hand, if considerable wheat bran and oats be fed, with abundance of milk, grass and hay, the tendency will be to produce a large stomach with a well sprung rib, fine head and short legs, while rapid growth will be secured. Such an animal will give a large flow of milk and keep in fair flesh upon pasture alone, and when dry will winter well upon hay. This is of great importance to the farmer, as a ton is worth only about twenty-five per cent. more than a ton of the best meadow hay for food. The best hay at four dollars per ton would be equal to corn at five dollars, or fourteen cents per bushel. Hay contains an abundance of nutritive material to support an animal in high condition. The question is, whether the animal will eat and can digest a sufficient quantity. This depends upon the hay and the capacity of the stomach.

THE Great Eastern has found her place at last. She has been sold to the British Government for use as a coal hulk at Gibraltar. Such is the inglorious end of the biggest ship on earth—or on the sea. She was too big for any practical use. Even the laying of ocean cables has been accomplished more successfully by ships of more moderate dimensions and there is nothing left for her but to make her a coal hulk.

ESQUIRE JAMES H. LEECH, a member of the House of Representatives from Caldwell County, died at the Meriwether Hotel in Frankfort, on the 3d inst. He had a severe congestion of the brain several weeks ago and has never been entirely conscious since, and his death has been hourly expected for more than a week. He was about sixty years of age and was highly respected as an honest and upright man by all his many acquaintances. He leaves a wife and several grown childern. Both Houses of the General Assembly adjourned as soon as his death was announced, and appointed committees to attend his funeral.

THE following is the new liquor law passed by the Lower House in the Legislature:

§ 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, The tax on licenses hereafter shall be as follows, viz: On a license to keep tavern, ten dollars; if with privilege to retail vinous or malt liquors, fifty dollars; if with privilege to retail spirituous liquors, or spirituous, vinous and malt liquors, one hundred dollars.

§ 2. The tax on a license to a coffee house keeper, if with privilege to retail spirituous liquors, or spirituous vinous and malt liquors, shall be one hundred dollars; with privilege to retail vinous or malt liquors, shall be fifty dollars.

§ 3. The tax on license to a merchant or druggist to sell vinous or malt liquors shall be fifty dollars; and on a license to sell spirituous liquors, or spirituous, vinous and malt liquors shall be one hundred dollars. If more than one person is engaged the sums herein mentioned shall be paid by the firm.

§ 4. Any tavern-keeper, merchant or coffee house-keeper, or other person who shall sell spirituous, vinous or malt liquors without having obtained a license therefor, shall, on conviction pay a fine of sixty dollars.

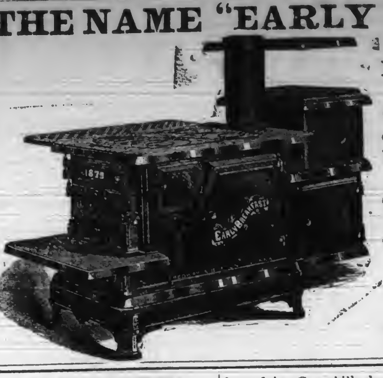
§ 5. All acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

§ 6. This act shall be in force from its passage.

THE report of the legislative committee that investigated the Anchorage Asylum is not very costic, but it is easily understood.

After reciting with favorable comment the condition of the buildings and grounds and approving of certain purchases it goes on to say:

"We find that escapes have occurred, notably one, that one neither excusable nor commendable; that one patient lost his life through the agency and at the hands of an employer, and the proof conduces to show that three more lost their lives through the neglect, inefficient watch, care, or inexperience of those immediately in charge; that patients have occasionally been beaten or strapped by attendants.



"We find from a careful consideration of all the evidence adduced before us that duckings and towel baths—more especially ducking—have been frequently practiced as a punishment to refractory patients and often under the guise of remedial agents; and we further find that such treatment is cruel in its nature, is contrary to the modern humanized methods of treating the insane, and is not consistent with the prevailing theory that the insane are not proper subjects of punishment.

"We are not unmindful of the fact that restraints are necessary to the treatment of the insane. Yet we think that the minimum amount of humane restraints ought to be sought after and used, and that the idea of punishment should never enter into or induce the use of them.

"Many duckings occurred without the knowledge or consent of the Superintendent in charge, yet in view of the fact that they were so frequent we are of the opinion that he is responsible therefor as the head of the institution over which he was legally and morally bound to exercise the closest scrutininy and vigilance.

"The committee is of the opinion that under the resolutions they are not authorized to make any recommendations as to the course to pursue in the matter by the General Assembly, but we are of the opinion that some immediate action ought to be taken in regard thereto, all of which is respectfully submitted." The report is signed by L. M. Martin and Austin Peay, of the Senate: David Walker, Walter B. Jefferson and L. D. Parker of the House

KANSAS LETTER.

HARPER, KAN., March 29, 1884.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

I will write you something about Kansas as it will be my future home. I have traveled over the greater part of the State, and the Indian Territory with a buggy and ponies. We have the dandiest little buggy horses you ever saw and can drive them 75 miles a day by the month. They are the next thing to iron horses. This is one of the finest farm and stock countries in existence, and in traveling over it for two or three days you will see wheat and corn alternately on either side of you as far as the eye can reach, while in the more broken country cattle roam by the thousands with now and then a few Deer or Buffalo. This is a fine place for sportsmen. You can stand still upon the branches and get all the shooting you want at ducks and geese.

The country is settling up very rapidly and after looking over it, I have settled in Harper county. I believe it is one of the finest in Kansas.

The wheat here is large enough to hide a cotton tail, and is a dark, rich green. We never have bad roads as there is just sand enough to keep out the mud. Bluegrass grows readily, also clover and timothy. We have a good stock of cattle, horses and hogs. I have settled within ten miles of the terminus of Fort Scott railroad. We have had nothing but summer weather since we struck the State, and it seems that we are way down South. Gardening is going on extensively. About four years ago there were not one hundred inhabitants, but now it claims three thousand. How is that for a boom? Everything and everybody is astir and over one hundred new buildings are now under way. There are from one to ten finished every day and the hotels are like bee-hives as the emigrants come in and go out, there are two trains a day, and every car comes loaded with passengers seeking homes in the West. You may send my paper here as I have planted myself and think I will take root. J. W. RICE.

STATE NEWS.

One day last week at Palmyra, Simpson county, William Ramsey ate thirty-six eggs.

Small-pox has appeared near Pembroke, Christian county, resulting in one death and considerable alarm.

The Times predicts that Warren county will be lined with turnpikes in ten years from now, and be the third wealthiest county in the State.

Mr. George Munday, of Logan county, has a cow that gave birth to four calves at one time recently, and two of them were living when last heard from.

Wm. Green, an itinerant painter hailing from Canada, who married a Miss Johnson, of Bowling Green, about a month ago, went to get a shave and has not yet returned.

W. S. Monroe, a saddler at Auburn has just repaired a saddle for a Mr. Paice, who has used it for over thirty-years, and which is a curiosity, being fourteen inches deep and nineteen inches long.

The Auburn Monitor. We have a cow in Auburn that is an inveterate tobacco chewer. She stands around the factories and tobacco wagons and picks up every stray leaf that falls to the ground.

Hopkinsville South Kentuckian: Boyd county sent eleven negroes to the penitentiary last week and Christian will send eight this week. At this rate there will not be much of the Republican party left in Kentucky to vote in the course of a few years.

William Wilson informs us that he found a flint lock gun, the barrel of which was six feet long, protruding from the river bank near the mouth of Locust a few days ago. He says the gun was washed out by the late flood, and was so decomposed that it all, except the lock which he now has in his possession, fell to pieces when moved. He also found 50 flints near by.—Milton Press.

Wallace Gruelle, of the Breckinridge News, who has always been a firm friend and supporter of Gov. Knott, has become disgusted with his administration. Says Gruelle: "The remission by Gov. Knott of the fines of that Greenhille druggist who turned his drug store into a common tippling house, and sold whisky in open and shameless violation of the local option law, is without excuse and indefensible. He made mighty pretty promises while seeking the nomination about upholding the majesty of the law, and permitting justice to take its course unobstructed by the executive prerogative, but it seems that he now has no regard for them. There was not a mitigating feature in this case. It was deliberate violation of the law, made for the purpose of enjoying the profits of an illicit monopoly. We regret this action of Gov. Knott. We believe in him most implicitly. We have been greviously deceived."

The Boone County Distillery Reduced to Ashes—Two Dwellings Burned—1,000 Cattle in the pens saved.

Last Saturday morning at 3:30 o'clock while the night watchman at the Petersburg distillery was absent calling up the hands that worked there, in anticipation of a big day's run, a fire broke out in the distillery, which burned like a tinder box, completely destroying the building and everything therein. At first the town was considered in danger, but the fire was got under control before any dwellings caught, one of which was occupied by W. A. Snyder, clerk at the distillery, and the other by a Mr. House, were burned. The Minnie was lying at the wharf but had very little steam up. She was cut loose and let drift to Aurora by which time she had sufficient steam to land and start back when the Aurora fire engine had been loaded. By the time the engine arrived, the citizens, by their heroic efforts, had the fire about under control, but the Aurora company attacked the flames with a vim, and by faithful work cleared away all possible chances for the fire to be communicated to any of the cattle pens or out buildings in close proximity to the burning building. The Aurora engine was taken home Saturday and one of the Lawrenceburg engines brought down, and it was engaged all Saturday night throwing water on the grain piles that were burning, which were about extinguished Sunday morning when the engine returned home. To both the above named fire companies the people of Petersburg feel exceedingly grateful for the assistance rendered them on this occasion.

The entire distillery was consumed, and all the machinery is considered a total loss, except the boilers which are intact, two of them having had a like experience once before when the steamer Pat Rogers was burned near Laughery.

The loss at the distillery is estimated at $100,000 with insurance sufficient to cover it, and is made up as follows: 200 barrels whisky; 17,000 bushels corn; 1,000 sacks malt; the building and all the machinery. The houses which Snyder and House occupied belonged to the company; Mr. Snyder saved everything except the contents of the cellar, and House was equally as fortunate.

The work of cleaning away the debris commenced Monday morning, and in about ninety days a much better distillery, ready for operation, will loom up where the old one was destroyed.

NOTES.

Nobody knows how the fire originated.

There are about 30,000 barrels of whisky in the warehouses.

Everybody was very quiet during the fire and worked like beavers.

Petersburg was full of strangers Sunday who visited the place to view the ruins.

Once or twice before, fire had attacked the distillery, but its discovery was timely.

The light of the fire was seen by early risers four or five miles south of Burlington.

Petersburg flies to the relief of her neighbors during floods, and they reciprocated in time of fires.

The light rain that fell Friday night, and the calmness of the morning Saturday made the fire easier to control.

About 1,000 head of cattle were being stopped at the distillery, and Sunday the Minnie commenced moving them to other distilleries.

The will of Samuel Moore, an account of whose suicide was given in these columns last week, was probated in the County Court, Monday. The will says all his real and personal property is to be sold, and makes no provision for the payment of his debts or funeral expenses. The devises are as follows: $2,000 to the Quarterly Conference of the Petersburg Circuit of the Kentucky Annual Conference, to be applied by said Conference in building or buying a parsonage not to cost less than $2,000. $2,000 to the Widow's and Orphan's Home at Louisville under the patronage of the Louisville Annual Conference of the M. E. Church South. The remainder to be turned over to the Board of Education of the Kentucky Weslyan University of the Kentucky Annual Conference of the M. E. Church South, to be used by said board in endowing a Chair of languages to be called "the Moore Chair of Languages." The estate consists of some personal property and 70 acres of land in this county, just below Rabbit Hash, and is estimated at about $7,000. The will was dated September 5th, 1874, and bears the signatures of C. W. Miller and B. F. Bristow as witnesses.

A JAIL DELIVERY.

Three Prisoners Confined in Boone County's $4,000 Jail, kick open the Doors and walk away.

The three prisoners confined in jail at this place, one under a bench warrant and two waiting the action of the grand jury next week, made their escape on the night of the 1st inst. They made their exit through the inner door by taking it off its hinges after breaking two iron bolts by the use of a six foot wooden bench which they used as a "battering ram." This bench had been used by the prisoners in lieu of a table and chairs, and proved a most effective engine for removing the first obstacle in their way. The first door being out of the way, the bench was again put in operation, this time as a lever with which to spring the lower corner of the heavy iron door that guarded the outer entrance. When this was sufficiently sprung, it is supposed that the smallest of the trio, which is the negro boy, crawled out, then used blocks to hold the door when sprung until the other men were able to make an exit. Being at liberty they began their flight, one of them stopping at O. P. Tanner's, about a mile from town on the Florence pike, where he took from the stable a horse, saddle and bridle, which he rode to Jeff Childress' gate on the Lexington pike near Erlanger, where he tried to pass the toll-gate free, but when Childress was about to interview him with a shot-gun he abandoned the horse and started under a run toward Covington. Mr Childress took charge of the horse, and kept it till its owner arrived in search of it. It was about two o'clock when the horse was abandoned at the toll-gate, which makes it appear that the escape was made about midnight, and that the work was that of but a few minutes and most likely was done while it was storming that night. No effort was made nor inducement offered for the capture of the culprits, and their free ride to the pen which they would most surely have secured is abandoned.

Mr. Cowen, the jailer says that he suspicioned that the prisoners would make an effort to escape, but was watching the walls thinking they would try to cut out.

This last delivery makes ten prisoners that have escaped from the jail since it was built, and only two of that number were ever captured and brought back, and they were convicted and got long terms.

Mr. Edward Fowler, another pioneer citizen of this county, passed away on the morning of the 2d inst. Several weeks since he contracted an attack of pneumonia from which he could not recover, although at on time his family and friends entertained hopes of his getting well. The deceased was born in this county near Union, August 13, 1806, consequently he was in his 78th year. When about 33 years old he embraced religion and united with the Presbyterian church at Richwood, under the preaching of Samuel Linn, and continued a member of the church the remainder of his life. Mr. Fowler was born and raised in Boone county, and no other one of her citizens ever enjoyed the confidence of her people to the extent he did, being often called to occupy places of public trust, and served as constable, deputy sheriff, overseer of the poor, and held the office of Assessor for three consecutive terms, a period of twelve years. He was a kind father and a devoted member of his church, and leaves seven children who have the sympathy of a large circle of friends in their bereavement. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Geo. W. Dunlap, assisted by Rev. Dicken, in the Baptist church at this place, last Thursday at 3 p. m., after which the remains were assigned to their last resting place in the Burlington cemetery.

Probation of J. M. Boyd's will continued to May term.

Samuel Moore's will probated, and A. G. McConnell appointed administrator with the will annexed. Charles Kenner and wife and others objected to the probation on the grounds charging that fraud had been practiced on the testator in procuring the will, and that the testator had not the soundness of mind nor capacity to make a will.

Samuel Stephens' motion to discontinue road, granted.

Able Beemon released from paying tax on 20 acres of land assessed at $20 an acre.

The Odd-Fellows' Relief Committee, of Wisconsin, sent, one day last week, to J. Frank Grant, Grand Master of Kentucky, a check for $400, to be used in aid of those of the order who lost property by the February floods in the Ohio river. They also sent alike amount to West Virginia, and $400 to Ohio.

W. H. Terrill, J. F. Grant, J. E. Terrill, Chas. Schranun and W. T. Stott, were elected town trustees for the ensuing year. It is to be hoped that they may cause the streets and alleys to be opened.

Verona.

The roads are getting good once more.

Farmers are somewhat behind with their spring work, but have been making up lost time the past few days.

Great interest is being manifested in our prayer meeting. It was organized early last fall and has had a good attendance all the winter.

Rev. Riley and family, have moved to the vicinity of Crittenden. They will be greatly missed here, especially in our Sunday-school.

A Sunday-school Institute will be held here on next Friday night, continuing several nights. We hope the people will all attend, because we are having a good school and want to make it as interesting as possible.

The unexpected wedding of Mr. Oscar Waller and Miss Ada Connely took place at 10 o'clock a. m., Wednesday morning. They were united in the holy bonds of matrimony by Rev. Riley, and after the ceremony made their departure on the morning train. We wish them a long and happy life.

The Pintoneau Society met last Thursday night, and made a success in their speeches, dialogues, orations, &c. The quartette played by Miss Stella O'Neal and sung by Misses Wolf, McCormac, Messrs Craven and Johnson was pronounced one of the best ever heard at this place. The society is young and all deserve a great deal of credit in the manner they acquitted themselves.

Bellevue.

Tobacco plants are making their appearance.

Quite a number have planted their early potatoes.

Tommy Clore made quite an improvement to his house last week.

Rev. Houston, of Cincinnati, preached in the School-house here Sunday.

We hear of a number of places from which assistance to build our wharf will come.

The drying weather last week very materially improved the breaking of the ground.

Several skiff loads of our citizens visited Petersburg Sunday to see the burned distillery.

We are glad to see our ferry once more in operation, after a suspension of several months.

Cards are out for the wedding of L. W. Krantz, of our city, and Miss Millie Lerch, of Augusta, in that city to-day. The groom's many newly made friends in our community, wish him and his bride a happy voyage over life's billowy stream.

On a closer examination we find that there is fair prospects for a crop of berries and small fruit in our vicinity, the fruits suffering most from the severe freeze, being peaches, cherries and the tender variety of grapes. Apples and pears are very promising.

Florence.

The first day of April, "all fools day" was celebrated here with a good deal of vim. The representatives were very numerous, but I am not prepared to say as to whether their qualifications were natural or acquired.

Miss May Petitt, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Spillman, at Crittenden, has returned to her home. Her many friends are glad to see her once more. Miss May contemplates opening a select school in this place in a short time.

The Assessor struck our town last week, and as the papers say "stocks had a terrific tumble," nearly ruined some of our stiffest men—men who, a short time before, boasted of their thousands, are in abject poverty—land all depreciated and surplus all gone. Even the canines have changed their base to keep from starving.

The town council held their regular session on Friday night, with a full board, though a little scattering in putting in their appearance. It was an important meeting, and was the occasion of some eloquent harangues in the protection of the interests of the town, and the frequent plaudits from the citizens in attendance evidenced their appreciation of their selection of councilmen. In an unlucky moment, the report of a committee and a motion of a member became so entangled that it was impossible to tell which end was the report and which the motion. Referred to the committee of ways and means. An application was made for a license to keep a tavern with the privilege of selling intoxicating drinks. The State tax not being paid the meeting was adjourned to be continued next Tuesday night to accommodate the applicant, as the three hotels we have are entirely insufficient to entertain the great stream of travel that is pouring through our town and our citizens need a place to refresh themselves with a pure glass of ice water.

Rabbit Hash.

Will Aera has moved to Aurora.

Dr. Cowen is building a commodious office.

Mr. P. G. Holmes will commence to rebuild in a few days.

Charlie Kenner and wife, of Aurora, are now in the neighborhood.

Wilson & Riddell are building a ware house on Dr. Platt's vacant lot.

The rat-to-tat-tat of Cobbie Aera's hammer is no longer heard in the land, as he has gone to farming.

Lizzie, daughter of Ben Mirrick, and who has been at death's door for several days, is now recovering.

Mrs. C. E. Ward, and her daughters, Misses Zou and Rachael, of Xenia, O., are visiting in this neighborhood.

The bridge from the store to Hillis' point has been completed without the shedding of blood. Yum, yum.

We have a splendid prospect for wheat, and if nothing happens there will be a large crop raised.

Farmers are now busy planting potatoes. There will be a large acreage planted, especially in the East Bend bottoms.

B. C. Calvert was in the city last week attending the sale of some tobacco he had there, and which brought satisfactory prices. He has his house full of tobacco, and we will insure it to be the nicest house of tobacco in the county.

Dr. Cowen and wife have moved to her father's for the summer. The doctor talks of putting up a telephone from here to Mr. Hastings', to be used in medical and meal calls. If the doctor is not here to answer at meal time, some of us will respond for him.

The weather has changed for the better. Some potatoes planted. Most of the oats are sown. Some tobacco plants up. Wheat looks fine. But very little breaking done. Considerable old corn in the neighborhood, and it is selling for from 40 to 45 cents a bushel. Some prospects for a small crop of apples.

We have had a flood, a runaway match, a fire and a suicide, and it is reported that the next unusual happening will be a wedding; so I am getting my hash-box ready, and will have the dentist to do some repairing on my grinders, and if I get a chance and don't do justice to the good things it will be very strange, indeed.

Last Sunday morning a little two year old son of a German who lives on the Petersburg pike at the top of the hill beyond the first covered bridge, attempted to follow his father to water the horses when he got lost, and wandered off into the clearing, where he was found about two o'clock p. m. The father and mother were much excited and grieved about the mysterious disappearance of their child which, on account of its light raiment would have chilled to death. Constable Sandford was sent for and assited in the search.

Misses Florence Graham and Emma Crisler have united with the Baptist church. The meeting is still in progress.

WHEN SPRING BEGAN.

While roaming in the woods one day,
I asked the question, half in play:
"Who can tell when Spring began?"
Straightway the answer came, "I can!"
And Robin Redbreast cocked his head.
"All right! Then pray proceed," I said.

"I must," said he, "express surprise
That any one with two good eyes,
Or even one, should fail to see
Spring's coming must depend on me.
When I come, then will come the Spring,
And that's the gist of the whole thing."

"Ho, ho! He, he! Well, I declare!"
A Squirrel chuckled, high in air.
"That is too droll—that you should bring,
Instead of being brought by, Spring.
I had n't meant to boast, but now
The cause of truth will not allow
My silence; so I'll merely state
That Spring for me must always wait.
The thing admits of not a doubt:
Spring can't begin till I come out."

"Well, bless my stars! For pure conceit," Began the Brook, "you two do beat
All I have heard. As if 't were true!
Spring never came at all till you
Were born, and can't come when you're dead!
I'm sorry, sir, you've been misled,
But I can set you right. I know
Spring comes when I begin to flow.
When my ice melts, and not till then,
Spring dares to venture forth again."

"Whew!" sneered the Breeze, in high disdain,
"You're wrong as they are, it is plain.
When I first came, not long ago,
I found you naught but ice and snow.
'T was my warm breath, you thankless thing,
That broke your bands and brought the spring.
The Robins and the Squirrels all
Come only when they hear me call.
In fact, I may assert with truth
I am the Spring itself, in sooth.
Spring's here because I'm here, and when
I leave, you'll have no Spring again."

LITTLE DOT, THE CHILD VOCALIST.

"He's a splendid card," exclaimed the manager, enthusiastically.

"Is he, indeed?" said Vance Raymond, rather abstractedly, as he gazed at the packed auditorium.

They were standing in the lobby of the Varieties. Raymond had dropped in for a few minutes while making his nightly round of the theaters. The manager, eager for a good notice in the daily upon which his companion served as a dramatic critic, was making himself almost offensively agreeable.

"The hit of the show!" he emphatically affirmed. "You'll wait for him, won't you? He comes on next."

"I don't know whether I can spare the time," said Raymond, smoothing out the play-bill that had been crumbled up in his hand. And, in type which stood out bolder than the rest, he read:

"LITTLE DOT!

"The Phenomenal Child Artist, in his wonderful character changes"—followed by more terms of a laudatory character, similarly extravagant.

Raymond carelessly cast his programme aside and watched the two upon the stage. They were going through what figured on the bills as an "acrobatic song and dance." Presently they executed a remarkable somersault that brought forth a cloud of dust, and made their exit, followed by the deafening applause of the gallery. In response, they came out and bowed, and the stamping of feet and clapping of hands gradually closed.

The quiet that fell upon the house was broken by the tinkle of the prompter's bell. The eyes of the audience expectantly sought the wings. The musicians raised their instruments and began to play one of the popular airs in vogue.

"Watch him," whispered the manager. "A born actor, and no mistake."

As he spoke, a little figure, clad in a black velvet suit with delicately striped pink stockings, appeared on the stage. A crimson handkerchief protruded slightly from his pocket and an eye-glass dangled at his side. In his hand he held a light cane, which he twirled foppishly at intervals.

Such a pinched, wan face he turned toward the audience, as he began his song in the yellow glare of the footlights! A feverish flush was on his cheeks and his eyes sparkled with unnatural brilliancy. Raymond felt his heart grow soft with pity as he listened to the rare, sweet voice that to his experienced ear already showed signs of breaking.

"Poor little chap," he murmured; "he's scarcely seven, I should judge." And somehow a tender thought of his two little chicks, dreaming perhaps of their childish heroes at the time, came to him. He watched little Dot through the mist that had gathered in his eyes.

The song soon came to an end and the child soon disappeared, followed by the enthusiastic approval of the audience. The manager joined in the applause and turned to Raymond, his face beaming with pleasure.

"Eh? eh?" he said, delightedly. "Doesn't he bring down the house? An infant prodigy, and all that, you know. 'Pon my word, it's worth the price of admission to see him alone."

"Rather a fit subject for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, I should say," remarked Raymond, dryly. "For my part I hate your infant prodigies. They all ought to be in their beds at this hour enjoying the sleep of healthful children."

The manager eyed him sharply.

"Stuff and nonsense!" he grunted. Then, in a more cheerful tone: "Just watch him this next turn. His drunken man is something wonderful. I'm capable of criticizing that, you know." And he hushed the chuckle on his lips as Little Dot—a complete metamorphosis—staggered in with a high silk hat crushed over his eyes and a white handkerchief hanging from his coat-tail pocket.

The drunken hiccough and thick utterance with which he rendered the song fairly convulsed the audience. When he was through, he was greeted with a terrific storm of applause.

"True to life, wasn't it?" laughed the manager. "Well, it ought to be. He's had plenty of chance to get points, goodness knows. His father's Whitely of the 'Stars,' who are playing at the Globe this week. Good actor, but boozes too much. That is why he and his wife separated. It's lucky she's got the boy. He's worth a cool seventy-five dollars to her every week."

Raymond listened with his eyes intent upon the stage. Little Dot was responding to his second encore. When he finished he was vociferously re-demanded. Again he came out and delivered a pathetic little recitation that evoked fresh applause. Raymond grew indignant.

"What a shame!" he muttered, angrily. "They'd keep the poor little fellow before them the whole night if they could."

At that moment Little Dot appeared from the wings and raised his hand to his lips. The pink glow on his lips had died out, and in its place was a look of utter weariness. The audience must have noticed it, for the house grew still and the performance proceeded with the next act.

Raymond buttoned up his overcoat closely and left the theater. It was a bitter night and the streets were well-nigh deserted. The snow lay deep upon the ground, and a raw, bleak wind blew the still-falling flakes remorselessly in his face. In spite of all his efforts he could not dismiss the peaked, wan face from his thoughts. A picture rose before him of Little Dot trudging his way back to the hotel in all the snow at an hour when other children were cosily tucked away in bed, and his heart was filled with pity at the contrast.

"Poor little chap!" he said again, with a sigh. "I'll give him a good notice."

The next night found him at the Varieties behind the scenes. At his request he was taken by the manager to the dressing-room that Little Dot occupied, and introduced to him. The child was with his mother waiting to "go on."

"It's the gentleman who was kind enough to write that notice about you," she said to him. "You must thank him for it."

"Oh, it was you, was it?" he said, turning his big blue eyes up at Raymond. "You're an editor, ain't you?"

The awe with which he asked this question brought a smile to Raymond's face.

"Not exactly," he replied. "I write for the newspapers."

"Do you?" said the child, eagerly. "How clever you must be! And it was you who wrote that about me. Thank you ever so much. You are very, very good."

He placed his hand to his forehead and held it there a moment. Raymond noticed it and looked grave.

"Are you quite well?" he asked, kindly.

"Quite well," the child faltered. "Only—only I'm a little tired and—my head aches. Hurry, mamma," as the call-boy appeared at the door; and, turning to Raymond, he held out his little hand. "Good-bye," he said. "It's time for me to go on."

Little Dot hastened with his mother through the dark and gloomy passage leading to the stage, and stood at a wing waiting for his cue. His mother stationed herself near by to assist him in making his changes.

Raymond and the manager sought the front of the house.

"That youngster is going to be sick," said the journalist, with conviction, as they parted. "He looked half ill now. It's too bad that such a weak, delicate child should have to be out nights in such bitter weather."

"Eh, what was that? Sick, did you say?" cried the manager, with alarm. I hope not—I hope not. It might affect business, you know, if he didn't appear. He is the strongest card on the bill this week."

Raymond curled his lip slightly at the other's heartlessness, and walked off. Somehow Little Dot interested him strangely. It might have been that he regarded the tiny favorite of the footlights with pitying tenderness, for the sake of his own children.

The next night he returned to the Varieties to find the fears he entertained realized. The manager met him with a note in his hand.

"Read it," he said, with a scowl upon his face.

Thus adjured, Raymond took it, and glanced hurriedly at the contents. It was to the effect that Little Dot was dangerously low with the scarlet fever, and, as a consequence, could not perform the rest of the week.

The words he read brought up a vivid recollection of the two babes who had lain in the terrible grasp of the scarlet fiend until only the great mother-love had won them back to life. A lump took possession of his throat.

"Poor Little Dot," he murmured.

"I wouldn't have had it happen for a hundred dollars," grumbled the manager. "It places me in a deuce of a fix. It's almost impossible to put any one on in his place at such short notice."

"You're in hard lines," said Raymond, coldly.

Something impelled him before he went to the newspaper-office that night to seek the second-class hotel where the child and his mother were stopping. Passing a florist's on his way, he purchased a bunch of the creamy, full-blown roses that were temptingly displayed in the window. These he sent up to the sick room with his card and a request to know how the little fellow was.

Presently the answer came—no better. Would he go up? Mrs. Whitely would like to see him.

Raymond followed the boy up-stairs and softly entered the darkened room. The mother, with the marks of weariness about her eyes, came from the window where she had been standing and led the way to the bed.

"He was taken ill last night on his way back from the theater," she whispered, in a hoarse, strained tone. "I thought it was nothing but a cold and—and did not call in a doctor. But he grew so much worse in the night that I had to send for one, and he says it's scarlet fever in its most malignant form. He has been delirious nearly all the time. The doctor did not tell me so, and yet—I'm sure he'll never get well again." She gave a bitter sob, but her eyes were dry—her tears had been exhausted long ago. "Oh, why doesn't he come, why doesn't he come?"

She resumed her place by the window, looking vacantly out at the wild, black night. Raymond remained by the bedside and gazed compassionately down at the small face marked with livid spots. Near him stood a stand upon which his fragrant offering and several vials of medicine were placed.

Suddenly the little sufferer opened his eyes with a faint moan. For a moment they rested upon Raymond and then wearily closed again.

"Dad!" the parched lips formed.

His mother approached the bed noiselessly and bent anxiously over him.

"Yes, Dot," she said, soothingly, "he will soon be here—soon be here. You won't have long to wait now, darling;" and looking up at Raymond, she continued, in a choking voice "he wants to see his father. I have sent for him, but—but I don't know whether he will come. He drank and—and we parted. God forgive me, I have been to blame, too. Oh, do you think that he will come?"

Raymond looked at his watch. The time lacked a few minutes of eleven.

"Yes, I am sure he will," he said, pityingly. "He is at the Globe, I think. The performance is scarcely over. No matter how heavy an actor's grief may be, he is obliged to disguise it sometimes and play his part. Yes, he will come, without doubt."

Slowly the minutes dragged by. Finally a faint knock was heard at the door. She went and softly opened it. A man entered on tiptoe.

"Thank Heaven, you are here at last!" she said.

"I could not come before," he uttered, hoarsely. "How is he—better?"

She mournfully shook her head. He went and looked down at his child. His haggard face told of the violent grief that was raging in his breast.

Raymond turned to go. He deemed the scene too sacred for his presence. But the mother grasped him by the arm, giving him a wild, imploring look.

"Stay," she said. "He liked you."

While his father stood there, the child opened his eyes and recognized him.

"Dad!" he cried stretching forth his little, hot hand affectionately.

His father caught it, and held it in his cool palm.

"Yes, my boy," he said, his strong voice trembling.

"Give me a drink, dad," he whispered, with difficulty. "Oh, dad," with a pathetic moan, "I'm all burning up!"

His father moistened his lips with water.

"There, Dot," he said, with forced cheerfulness. "You feel better now, don't you? And you're going to get well soon. Such good times we'll have together when you do! We'll——"

The child interrupted him with a faint shake of his head.

"No, dad," he said, fixing his big eyes solemnly upon him, "I won't get well; and I want you to promise me—promise me—"

"Yes, Dot," he said, with a groan.

"That you won't get—get—that way!"

He looked steadily up. His father bowed his head, too full of anguish to speak.

"That's a good dad," said the child, fondly. "I knew you would. You couldn't help it, could you, dad?"

Every word was a stab at the man's heart. He turned to Raymond. "For God's sake, get a doctor," he said, brokenly. "He's dying!"

"No, no," interposed the child, hastily. "It's too late—too late! Where's mamma? I can't see. I want her hand."

His mother came and held out her trembling hand to him. His father gently endeavored to draw his away.

"No, no!" said Dot, the words coming in gasps. "I want both—both."

He strove with his remaining strength to join them together. They saw what he wished to do, and clasped hands.

A peaceful smile lit up his wan face. He said no more, and yet they understood.—Malcolm Douglas, in The Continent.

Young Lady Whistlers.

The familiar air of "The Mocking Bird" whistled through West Forty-sixth street yesterday morning, but the music was not that of a flute, the flageolet, the clarionet or the fife. A reporter of the Herald, who was passing along the street, stopped to listen, for, save a pretty young lady standing on a door step, no one was in sight. Still the twittering and bird-like solo continued to vibrate down the block. It was the young lady who was whistling, and the reporter took the liberty of expressing his astonishment to her.

"Were you whistling?" he inquired of the young music maker.

The young lady smiled, turned three different corners in the tune, worked in a tremolo half a dozen birdlike trills, stopped and answered:

"Yes. Why?"

"Because you whistle so beautifully, and——"

"Well, I think I ought to," she interrupted; "I've been taking lessons long enough, and my mouth has grown five-eighths of an inch smaller since I began to practice regularly."

"You take lessons and your mouth has grown smaller?" echoed the reporter.

"Yes; you needn't look as if I was telling a story. Of course I take lessons. Lots of girls whistle now, because it's fashionable."

"Who is the professor?"

"A colored man, who used to wait on us at Long Branch."

"Where is the conservatory?"

"Oh, he comes to our houses twice a week. His name is John Wise, but he says it's James Francis Cecil Clay Accomac Upshire, junior to John Wise, of Northampton County, Va. He is a wonderful musician."

"Then whistling will make the mouth small?"

"Why, of course it will. A girl that has a four inch mouth can reduce it to three inches by a regular course of study. Besides, the puckering of the lips makes them fuller and gives them a nicer color."

"How long does it take to dock an inch off an ordinary sized mouth?" asked the reporter.

"Oh, I don't know," was the answer. "A girl must never sing, use large toothbrushes, or take big bites out of apples. Then, if she practices all the time when she is in the house she will probably reduce the size of her mouth in about two years. Why, I can whistle everything, even scientific sacred music, and you see how small my mouth is. It is different from singing in a choir. The overture from 'Tampa' is, perhaps, the most difficult selection in my repertoire. It requires so much active tongue movement. But a fine whistler must have a good ear, and good teeth that are not too widely apart."

"Will you kindly describe the method employed by the professor in lessons to beginners?"

"Well, he doesn't allow new pupils to sound a note until they have become perfect in the control of their mouths. He illustrates silently with his lips how they should be drawn up and the students watch him and endeavor to imitate him. Oh! we are going to have a concert this spring and then you may see and hear for yourself."

"Professor" Wise was found in an up-town billiard saloon, occupied in the sedentary employment of watching two athletes from Columbia College struggle with a game of pool. He was a short, grizzly-pated man, of gamboge tint, with a smooth face and large lips.

"Yes, sar; I'm Profess' Wise," he said, with tantalizing slowness, "an I'm an instructor in de art ob moosic. Yes, sar; it's whistlin' wha' I teach to de young ladies of so-ciety. Yes, sar; sum lips like de plovar an sum like de ole jay bird. Farming Facts.

Chemistry has been called "The corner stone of agriculture." It is true in the abstract, for by chemical change the plant is enabled to receive the elements that go towards their organization.

"Agriculture is the groundwork of the wealth of nations," is an universally received axiom. It is true that without agriculture, no nation could emerge from barbarism, and the higher the agriculture the greater the possible civilization, but none but the crudest agriculture could exist, unless manufactures, art and commerce rendered implements perfect and cheap, with commerce to quickly and economically transport the products of agriculture.

Horticulture is the poetry of agriculture. It is refining in its nature, broadens the mind, creates a love for the beautiful, and its products are the most healthful food of man. An indifferent farmer never made a good horticulturist. A good farmer may, for to be successful he must begin by being a good farmer.

The word agriculture is derived from two Latin words, ager, a field, and cultura, cultivation. Literally the cultivation of a field. From the first we also get our word acre, and it was undoubtedly originally used to express husbandry. Now, however, it is used in its broad sense, to embrace all that pertains to the farm, the orchard, the garden, and the ornamentation of the homestead. The word husbandry is now used to denote what pertains to the farm, and the word horticulture, all that pertains to the garden.

The word horticulture comes from two Latin words, hortus, a garden, and cultura, from colo, to till. It is now sub-divided into pomology, the culture of orchards; horticulture, the cultivation of forest trees; gardening, the cultivation of garden fruits and vegetables; floriculture, the florists' art, and landscape gardening, or the formation of artificial effects in the landscape, the highest art in horticulture.

Husbandry is now divided into many and separate branches, although one or more are generally combined. The two great divisions of husbandry are field husbandry, sub-divided into grain husbandry, grass husbandry, seed husbandry, cotton-planting, sugar-cane planting, tobacco culture and hemp raising; when several of these are combined it is called mixed husbandry. The other great division of husbandry is stock raising. This again is divided into horse breeding, cattle breeding, sheep husbandry, swine breeding, poultry raising and stock feeding and fattening. When a number of the true divisions are combined it is called mixed husbandry, the most profitable of all.—Farmers' Review.

The Art of Grafting.

Whip-grafting is the best method, requiring only a sharp, small pocket-knife blade to make a smooth, flat shave; and a little roll of quarter-inch strips of old muslin, wound on the end of a small stick four or five inches long and soaked through in melted grafting wax, usually made of linseed oil, one part; clean beeswax, two parts; and white rosin (dark rosin is too entirely drained of the turpentine), four parts. A strip of the waxed cloth two and half to three inches long, wound on spirally, in only one layer, so that it may yield to the expansion of growth, will cover closely every part of the cut on scion and stock, when of the usual size—that of a lead-pencil.

It is all important that this wrapping be perfect to prevent the drying up of the faces that are to unite. Another essential is that the scions be not only sound and plump, uninjured by the drying effects of frost and winter wind; but that they be of fully matured shoots, of the stoutest of last year's growth from the open exterior of the tree. This is as essential in a graft as in a seed, for neither can become established unless they contain within themselves enough ready-prepared material to form the first leaves upward, and extend into the soil—or into the stock in the case of the scion—downward.

Every boy should learn the simple and most useful art of grafting, and now is the time to begin to gain the experience. Whip-grafting is easy enough for his sister to learn, too. Let her at least begin by applying the wrapping and so have an interest in the coming fruit. Wax made as above, and tested in a bucket of water as to hardness—it should be just compressible between thumb and finger using some force, in water from fifty to fifty-five degrees—will not stick to the fingers so as to make any trouble, yet will to adhesive enough to cling closely and permanently to the dry bark.—N. Y. Tribune.

The Hotel Porter's Story.

"Unless the man happens to be rich and has travelled about a good deal he will never go to the clerk for information. The average hotel guest will stop a bell boy, or a boot black, or go to the news stand for information first, or, as is most likely, come to me. The other day a young dudish-looking thing came in here with an umbrella cover on him for a Newmarket, and after waiting around for awhile stepped up to my baggage book while I had turned my back. I had seen him before; in fact knew him—but not personally; he was a new reporter. So I asked one of the guests whom I knew to go up to him and tell the dude to send for his baggage. He did it fine. The young dude turned to him with an awful face and said he didn't know anything about any baggage. The guest replied indignantly—he made out he was indignant—'I don't want any of your impudence. You are the porter here and I want my baggage.' Well, sir, there wasn't room enough for the dude to get out. He ran against the columns and over the chairs and into the spitoons. The last I saw of him he was trying to open a storm door the wrong way."—Chicago Herald.

He began to build a house, but his original design grew, with wing on wing, until it flew away with all his cash capital, and more, too. One bright morning as he leaned meditatively over a fence, looking toward his Aladdin palace, a stranger passing by asked: "Sir, whom does that handsome edifice belong to?" "That," said the squire, with a sparkle in his eye, "is just what I am trying to find out!"

THE best interests of humanity depend on the good health of our women folks, and yet those with brightest intellects seem to suffer most with ailments peculiar to female life. It is well to remember that the whole female system can be built up to a proper state of endurance, pimples, sores, swollen limbs, monthly pains, and other indications of female disease, made to disappear and robust health of mind and body take the place of illness and distress, if a timely use is made of Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. LONG SUFFERING

From Stone in the Kidneys of One of Troy's Best Citizens—His Recovery Through the Use of David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy (of Rondout, N. Y.).

It is by no means strange that Dr. David Kennedy should have received the following letter. By reading it you will see in one minute why James Andrews was thankful:

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR—Until within a recent date I had for several years suffered greatly from Gravel, called by the doctors the Brick-dust Sediment. For about a year past this sediment has not passed off in the usual quantity, but has accumulated, causing me untold pain. Having heard of DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, I tried it in my case, and after using about one and one-half bottles, I voided a stone from the bladder, of an oval shape, 7-16 of an inch long, and rough on its surface. I send you the largest piece that you may see of what it is composed. Since then I have felt no pain. I now consider myself cured, and can not express my thankfulness and gratitude for so signal a deliverance from a terrible disease. You have my consent to use this letter, should you wish to do so, for the benefit of other sufferers. Yours truly, JAMES ANDREWS.

No. 10 Marshal St., Ida Hill, Troy, N. Y.

When we consider that the medicine which did this service for Mr. Andrews costs only one dollar a bottle, it would seem that persons afflicted in like fashion can afford the expense of testing its virtues. Get it of your druggist, or address Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

POISON

In the blood is apt to show itself in the Spring, and nature should by all means be assisted in throwing it off. Swift's Specific does this effectively. It is a purely vegetable, non-poisonous remedy, which helps nature to force all the poison or taint out through the pores of the skin.

Mr. Robert A. Easley, of Dickson, Tenn., writes, under date March 10, 1884: "I had chills and fever, followed by rheumatism, for three years, so that I was not able to attend to my business; had tried almost every kind of medicine, and found no relief. A friend recommended Swift's Specific. I tried one bottle and my health began to improve. I continued until I had taken six bottles, and it has set me on my feet, as sound and well as ever. I recommended it to all similarly afflicted."

CROP REPORTS.

Returns Made to the Department of Agriculture.

Winter Wheat in Excellent Condition—Increased Acreage—Averages on Rye.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—The April returns of the Department of Agriculture make the winter wheat area about 27,000,000 acres. This is merely the breadth sown of the previous crop, of which between five and six per cent. was subsequently plowed up, leaving 26,400,000 acres to be harvested. Comparing with the areas harvested, the present breadth is an increase of five per cent. The present area is greater than the census year by more than two million acres. There is an increase of about 1,500,000 acres on the Pacific Coast, and nearly 750,000 acres in the Southern States. There is a small increase in the Middle States, and a slight decrease in the Ohio basin. The condition of wheat averages 95, 100 representing the full stand, of unimpaired vitality and medium growth. In April, 1883, the average was 80, and 85 in April, 1881. The April average of the large crop of 1882, was 104. The State averages are as follows: Connecticut 100, New York 97, New Jersey 95, Pennsylvania 99, Delaware 96, Maryland 102, Virginia 101, North Carolina 102, South Carolina 97, Georgia 95, Alabama 88, Mississippi 92, Texas 101, Arkansas 81, Tennessee 98, West Virginia 100, Kentucky 98, Ohio 88, Michigan 94, Indiana 92, Illinois 82, Missouri, 91, Kansas 101, California 101, Oregon 102. In Michigan, New York and Connecticut the fields were protected with snow on the 1st of April, in some places one foot in depth. The subsequent condition will depend on the weather of April. No serious winter killing is reported, except in Alabama. On low and wet areas some injury is reported throughout the entire breadth. The superior condition of drilled wheat is attested almost without exception. The area of rye is nearly the same as last year, the average being 99 per cent.; the condition averages 97 per cent. The report also gives a statement of farm animals, estimated losses of the past year, and the proportion of high-grade animals and money value of improvement by breeding in the several States.

Giving Up the Victims.

POCAHONTAS, Va., April 11.—After working faithfully all night the gang of seventy-five workmen engaged in making the last preparations for entering the mines completed their task yesterday morning. The foul air in the interior for more than three days has been pouring out like a blast from a steam whistle, through the opening drilled from the mountain's top down the upper workings of the mine, and it was thought that the interior had been sufficiently ventilated to admit of men exploring the upper drifts in search of the dead. When the gallery had been partially ventilated the men moved slowly into the mine, and for the first time since the terrible explosion, several weeks ago, commenced a systematic exploration of the interior. Sixteen dead bodies were recovered. Only six were recognizable by their clothing. Many bodies were horribly mangled, some had their heads blown off and others had their arms and legs torn from the sockets. Still others had their entrails torn out entirely. An arm and leg were found in the main entrance, but the body to which they belonged could not be found. A thrill of horror passed through the crowd as the rescuing party brought out the charred and disfigured remains of a miner with a dinner bucket clasped in his arms. He had probably just partaken of his midnight meal when the explosion buried him into eternity. Several miners were found with their picks in their hands, and the positions indicate conclusively that death was instantaneous to all in the mine.

Testing Her Husband's Love.

SHELBYVILLE, ILL., April 10.—Mrs. Ursury, a lady living near Stewerdson, had a quarrel with her husband, and she thought to frighten him by appearing before him with her clothes saturated with kerosene, being a kind of threat as to what she would do if he did not make up. He seemed to take it very coolly, not even noticing her condition, which so exasperated her that she went to the stove and set fire to her clothes. Of course, she became immediately enveloped in flames, became frightened, rushed from the house and threw herself into a ditch close by. Her husband followed, and tore her clothes off as quickly as he could, but too late to save her. She lingered in great agony, and expired on Wednesday. She leaves a large family of children.

Railroad Employes Fight.

ST. THOMAS, ONT., April 11.—A fight occurred this morning between a gang of sixty Italians and an equal number of Irish laborers on the Canada Southern Railroad, caused by the Irish objecting to the employment of Italians. The police, with the assistance of citizens, succeeded in stopping the fight after several on both sides had been seriously wounded.

A Niagara Falls Tragedy.

NIAGARA FALLS, ONT., April 10.—Thos. Vedder and N. R. Pierson, brothers-in-law, drove to Goat Island yesterday. Not returning, search was made this morning. Pierson's body was found on Luna Island, shot through the head. The horse and buggy were found tied to a tree. Vedder's clothes were discovered lying on the ice, but no trace of him could be found. It is supposed that the men quarreled and Vedder shot Pierson, afterward committing suicide by jumping into the rapids. Both were respectable citizens of Suspension Bridge, N. Y.

Fatal Elevator Accident.

ELKHART, IND., April 10.—Horace Rice and another young man named Delcamp were precipitated from the third story of Haw's furniture factory, at Goshen, this morning, by the falling of the elevator, the cable having broken. Rice was fatally injured and Delcamp badly crushed.

Failures of the Week.

NEW YORK, April 11.—Business failures for the past week reported by R. G. Dun & Co., in the United States, 175; Canada, 30. Compared with 212 for the previous week.

A Mysterious Murder.

BALTIMORE, MD., April 11.—Mrs. Celia Murphy, an elderly women, has been living alone on a small farm near Federalsburg, Dorcester County, Md. She has been separated from her husband for five years, and was believed to have accumulated considerable money as the result of her industry and economy. Yesterday she was missing, and a search of her premises revealed the fact that her house had been robbed, and there was every evidence of a desperate struggle having taken place in the dining-room of the dwelling. A search was made for Mrs. Murphy, and late yesterday afternoon her dead body was found in the thicket near her residence. Her skull was horribly crushed and her throat cut from ear to ear. An examination developed that the cutting was done with a blunt carving-knife, and the blows on the head inflicted with an ax or hatchet. The murdered woman's maiden name was Bush. She was born upon the place, and fell heir to the property upon the death of her parents. The farm is a valuable one, but it has a weird and forsaken appearance. Mrs. Murphy has been the only occupent of the farm for many years, with the exception of the brief interval of her marriage. She was never known to employ help of any kind. She used to stack her own fodder, cut her wheat and do all other farm work, notwithstanding she was sixty-eight years old. Who the murderer is appears to be a mystery, yet suspicion is attracted to an old beau of deceased, who, it is said, swore several years ago to kill her if she ever married any one but himself. Mrs. Murphy's husband only lived with her a few months and disappeared mysteriously five years ago, and has not been seen since. Some friends of the deceased state that in their opinion the beau above mentioned spirited away Mr. Murphy, and then killed him, and has at last had his revenge upon the wife. Since the disappearance of the husband no tidings have been had of him.

A Fiendish Act.

XENIA, O., April 11.—One of the most fiendish crimes in the history of the State was perpetrated on the Dayton and Richmond branch of the Pan-handle, three miles west of this city, last night. An express train was thrown from the track by some villains for the purpose, no doubt, of robbing the passengers, whom they hoped to send to their death. About one car length from the end of the bridge which spans the Miami River at that point, the engine jumped from the track, and, instead of plunging in the river, leaped over onto the narrow-gauge track, which runs parallel at that point, and then onto the narrow-gauge's bridge, and thence partly into the river, carrying away part of the narrow-gauge bridge. The cars were thrown from the track, and some rolled down the embankment and were badly shattered. Engineer Thomas was instantly killed, and his remains were found in the debris of his engine. Fireman John McConnell was so badly injured that he can live but a short time. Baggagemaster George Confer received severe internal injuries, and his recovery is doubtful. Express Messenger Wesley Smith sustained a severe injury to his spine and was otherwise bruised and cut. A dozen passengers were more or less injured. Had the train plunged into the river the loss of life would have been terrible. After the accident it was discovered that a tool-house in the vicinity of the bridge had been broken into, and a number of tools, such as are used for repairing tracks, were missing. Some of these were found in a field near by, and there is no doubt but they were used in displacing the rail. The nuts and bolt from the connecting bar which fastens the rails together had been taken out, and were lying on the cross-tie. The bar was not wrenched in the least, which would have been the case had it been fastened.

A Lawyer Suicides.

PITTSBURG, PA., April 11.—Ossian Terburgh, a prominent young lawyer, committed suicide in the bath-room of his father's residence by taking prussic acid. Dr. Terburgh, the father of the young man, can assign no cause for the self-murder of his son. The letter came home about the usual time this afternoon and appeared to be in the best of spirits. His practice was large and he spoke of his prospects as being most encouraging. Shortly before the hour at which dinner was usually served he went to the bath-room and after carefully dressing himself, took the dose which ended his life. It is stated that a number of sensational letters, fully explaining the deed, have been found this evening, but the father denies this, and says the public will never know more about the suicide than is given above.

A Non-Est Cashier.

MONMOUTH, ILL., April 11.—The bank examiner has completed his examination of the collapsed National Bank, and finds a deficit of $114,702, which is supposed to represent the amount of Cashier Hubbard's defalcation. Enough good assets have been found to pay the depositors eighty per cent. If the deficit is made good within sixty days the bank will be allowed to resume business. The absconding cashier has not yet been found. His household goods were seized to-day on attachment.

Coal Miners' Strike.

PITTSBURG, PA., April 11.—Fifteen hundred miners of Westmoreland and Pen Gas and Coal Company, at Irwin Station, Pa., are out on a strike. They are willing to stand a reduction of ten cents a ton, but object to a one-fourth inch change of screen, equal to a cut of twenty per cent. in wages.

Deluge in California.

LOS ANGLES, April 10.—A perfect deluge of rain has fallen in the last thirty-six hours. Three inches fell during the night. Trains east and west are blockaded by washouts.

No Indian War this Season.

EUFAULA, I. T., April 12.—The Creek Indian troubles are virtually settled. Checate and Speeckee have concluded to abide by the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, and advise their supporters to do so.

Osman Digna Weakening.

LONDON, April 10.—A private letter from General Gordon, dated March 11, says: "If the Government does not intend to relieve us we had better evacuate immediately." The English Government will subsidize Ayoub Khan, who with followers is detained at Meshed by the Persian Government, at the express request of England.

FOREIGN WARS.

Khartoum Reported Fallen and General Gordon a Prisoner.

Communication with Berber Cut off—French Before Hong Hoa and Expecting Immediate Occupancy—Battle in Cuba.

CAIRO, April 13.—Communication with Berber by land and water is cut. Rebels have raided the environs.

LONDON, April 13.—Advices from Suakim state that it is rumored that Khartoum has fallen, and General Gordon is a prisoner.

PARIS, April 13.—A dispatch from Sontay of April 11 says "General Negrier Wednesday bombarded the villages before Hong Hoa. The enemy forthwith began to evacuate the town without resistance. The French will enter Hong Hoe to-morrow." General Millot telegraphs: "On the 9th inst., Hong Hoe was bombarded six hours. The Chinese offered no resistance, but evacuated after setting fire to the town, which is now in flames. Part of the Chinese fled to Phuleng and part to Donveng and Thenhoa." The Leberte publishes the conditions of peace between France and China, which Patenotre, the French Minister, is charged to offer at Pekin. It is stipulated China shall accept a limited French Protectorate over Tonquin. No demand for indemnity is mentioned.

MADRID, April 13.—An official dispatch from Cuba reports that a band of forty-two insurgents, under Duraa, who intended joining Aguero, were attacked by troops and thirty-eight men killed.

Desperate Criminals.

KNOBEL, ARK., April 12.—This evening as Will Onby, Jailer of Green County (Gainesville), entered the cells with supper for the prisoners, he was attacked with pieces of a broken chain and knocked senseless after a hard struggle, in which he shot one prisoner in the right leg. Eight men, confined on various charges, then escaped and secured arms from the Jailer's house adjoining, preparatory to resisting capture by citizens, to whom an alarm had been given. In a short time about fifty citizens came to the rescue of officers. An open battle followed, in which over one hundred shots were exchanged. Breckman, in for burglarising a store at Betheia, was shot and killed instantly by Alonzo Steadman. Three others were wounded, and surrendered. The remaining prisoners escaped to a cypress swamp, being pursued until dark, when all hopes of recapture was given up. None of the citizens were injured but Onby, who received dangerous wounds about the head and may not recover.

Slavery in the Congo Basin.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—In view of the prominence which the Congo question is assuming, both here and in Europe, the following, from the report of Consul Duverge, in regard to slavery there, is of interest: "The purchase of slaves continues, at the values of £5 or £6 each. When they can not be bought they are obtained in the following manner: An article or object of some kind is laid aside, out of the way, but within reach of the negro, who at once steals it, and being taken in flagrante delictu, becomes at once a slave. If he is a person of importance, and is claimed by his relatives or by the chiefs of the village to which he belongs, he is sometimes given up in exchange for two or three slaves, who take his place, and lose thereby the liberty they enjoyed to become slaves in their village. These are put in chains, and made to work under the lash and the rod."

The Fatal Number 13.

CINCINNATI, April 13.—Switch Engine No. 13 of the C. H. & D. Company, killed two men yesterday at different times. Both are believed to be entirely accidental. At 10:15 o'clock yesterday morning, James Lambert, formerly a repair foreman, was caught by the engine and both legs cut off above the knees. He was taken home by Patrol No. 4, and died at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. An hour after his death John Quinn, a laborer, while crossing the yard on his way home to supper, was run over by the same engine, and both arms cut off and head mangled. He died almost instantly.

The Suspected Train-Wrecker.

DAYTON, OHIO, April 13.—Michaels, arrested here on Friday on suspicion of being the wrecker of the Pan-Handle Express last Thursday night, was identified this afternoon by Conductor Pierson, who had charge of the wrecked train, as a tramp he had put off only a few days before. Measurement of his feet also corresponds with the tracks in the mud about the tool-house. To-day Michaels admits that he is a tramp and that he was in the vicinity of the wreck on Thursday, but claims his innocence. There is a strong feeling against him, but so far the evidence is merely circumstantial.

A Statement of Post-Office Revenues.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—A statement prepared at the Post-office Department shows that while the revenue for the quarter ended March 31 was less than that for the corresponding quarter of the preceding year, the issue of two-cent stamps exceeded by twenty-seven per cent. the combined issue of two and three-cent stamps for that quarter. The issue of postal cards has fallen off about thirteen million pieces since the inauguration of the two-cent rate.

Run Down by a Train and Killed.

CHICAGO, ILL., April 13.—James Maher and his little child Maggie were instantly killed to-night by being run down by a suburban train on the Illinois Central, at the Ninety-first street crossing. They were crossing the tracks at the time of the accident, Mrs. Maher being in advance of them. She turned to await their approach on the passing of the train, and failing to see them retraced her steps and fell over their mangled remains.

A Constable's Warm Reception.

YOUNGSTOWN, O., April 13.—Constable Nelson, with a writ of restitution, endeavored to eject Mrs. Fagg from a house she was occupying for non-payment of rent. The woman had a kettle of boiling water ready, and gave the Constable a Russian bath when he attempted to enter the house scalding him very badly. She still holds the house, the officers having no fancy for scalding water.

—Chief Engineer Melville, of the Jeannette expedition, received the other day a bottle of whisky which had been forwarded to him on February 4, 1882, while he was in the wilds of Siberia. The bottle had traveled 6,000 miles by sea, over 11,000 miles on the sledge journey in Siberia, and about 4,500 miles by rail.—N. Y. Herald.

XLVIIIth CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, April. 9.—SENATE.—Mr. Hill, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the original bill to establish a postal telegraph system. Mr. Hill remarked that the Committee were unanimous as to the first ten sections of the bill which relate to the doing of work by contracts with existing companies, but that a minority of the Committee were opposed to the section relating to the construction or purchase of lines by the Government. The provision relating to the liability of the contracting company for failure to correctly and promptly transmit messages has been amended by limiting such liability to 500 times the amount paid for transmission. Two new features have been added to the bill. The first authorized the contracting company to employ a Postmaster as its agent and operator at any postal telegraph office where telegraphic receipts are insufficent to pay the salary of the operator, and to pay him a commission not exceeding 50 per cent, of the charges on messages transmitted from the office. The second requires the Postmaster General to secure the provisions of a contract which shall protect postal telegrams against discriminations in the order of transmission in favor of telegrams received at such of the company's offices as are not operated under the provisions of the bill. The contract system remains the most prominent feature of the bill, and is not widely different from the scheme of the Postal Telegraph Company, except that it empowers the Postmaster General to receive bids from any telegraph company for the contract. The provisions relating to the establishment of a Government system, pure and simple, in the event that no satisfactory contract with the established companies is secured, are a combination of the features of the Hill and Edmunds bills.

HOUSE.—Mr. Hopkins offered a set of resolutions, reciting the abuses of cattle in transportation, and violations of laws for humanity toward them, and proposing that the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire whether those evils do in fact exist, and to what extent they may be remedied by law, with power to send for persons and papers, and with directions to report at any time, by bill or otherwise. The rest of the day was consumed in debating several bills and passing one for a public building at Weco, Texas, to cost $100,000.

House calendar. Mr. Henley, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill forfeiting Northern Pacific land grant. House calendar. The House went into Committee of the Whole (Mr. Springer in the chair) on the Pension Appropriation Bill. Adjourned till Monday.

—A recent writer on the emotions of infants says curiosity shows itself the minute a child begins to take interest in other things besides its food; and when, though it still carries everything to its mouth, it does so merely because the tongue is the finest as well as the most exercised organ of touch. At this stage the child handles things, looks at them closely, pulls them to pieces, and so in playing instructs himself.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Legislative Proceedings.

FRANKFORT, April 4.—SENATE.—Bills passed: House bill to regulate advertising in Lawrence County, and compensation for same. House bill to regulate the sale of liquors in Catlettsburg. House bill to amend the charter of the city of Louisville. House bill to regulate the sale of liquors in Butler County. House bill to prohibit the sale of liquors in Hopkins County. House bill to regulate the sale of liquors in Hullittsville. To levy a tax for school purposes in a district in Campbell County, and to provide for collecting same. House bill to prevent the sale of liquors in a portion of Casey County. To legalize the levy of taxes in Harrison County.

HOUSE.—Auditor Hewitt made a report to the House as follows: There has been borrowed of the banks, to meet deficit in Treasury, $500,000. There is now in the Treasury $192,357 52. There are outstanding school drafts to the amount of $101,000 now due. In May there will fall due $100,000 more. There is due to-day to the charitable institutions their regular quarterly allowance of about $96,004 37. On the other hand, there is due from Sheriffs about $300,000. The present fiscal year closes June 30th; hence nine months thereof have passed by. The expenditures for that period have exceeded a little the Auditor's estimates as shown in report, page 4, but the estimated receipts have also been similarly exceeded; therefore, there would seem to be no reason for changing the estimate referred to, which gives a deficit of $477,891 47 on the 30th of June, 1884, except as that deficiency may be increased by a prolonged session of the Legislature, or extraordinary appropriations. All of which is respectfully submitted.—FAYETTE HEWITT, Auditor.

The substitute was then adopted. The bill, as amended, was then rejected—yeas, 38; nays, 15—not having received a constitutional majority. Mr. Ratcliffe entered a motion to reconsider. Mr. Harris entered a motion to reconsider the bill prohibiting the sale of liquors in the town of Wickliffe, in Ballard County. A bill to remove the seat of government from Frankfort to Lexington. The question was then taken on the passage of the bill, and it was rejected—yeas, 25; nays, 34.

FRANKFORT, April 8.—SENATE.—A bill to amend Section 6, Article 35, Chapter 29 of the General Statutes. Passed. Miscellaneous Items.

CATHERINE METZ, wife of Ferdinand Metz, a journeyman tailor of Louisville, a victim of melancholia, jumped from the window of her room the other night, falling upon the brick-covered court three stories below. Occupants of the building were aroused, and the poor woman was assisted to her apartments. Her right arm was crushed, and blood was rushing from her mouth, ears, nose and eyes. She died an hour later. She left a very young babe and three other children.

THE two-year-old child of Valentine Warnig, Louisville, overturned a pot of coffee upon itself at the supper table the other night, and was so badly scalded that death ensued.

THE grocery firm of Clere & Addison, of Louisville, was victimized the other day by a New York sharp to the amount of $120. He pretended to purchase the store, and while an inventory of the stock was being taken he learned the combination of the safe, opened it, got the money and skipped. The man gave his name as R. D. Fuller, representing that he was a capitalist in search of a good business location.

JOHN BROADY, colored, seriously stabbed Dr. Ben S. Woods, of Hopkinsville, in the abdomen the other morning in a dispute about a half dollar Woods owed Broady for attending to his horses. Dr. Woods's condition is considered very critical by his physicians. Broady was committed to jail to await the result of the doctor's injuries.

LOUIS LEICHTY, aged about fifty years, committed suicide a few days since at his boarding-house, in Louisville. Deceased arrived in that city several months ago from New Orleans. He had been a sufferer from consumption.

THE DAIRY.

—This is worth repeating. Prof. Brown, of the Ontario model farm says: "An average cow for dairy purposes should give twenty pounds of milk per day during 200 days every year; eight pounds of cream from every 100 pounds of milk; forty-five pounds of butter from every 100 pounds of cream; and fully ten pounds of cheese from every 100 pounds of milk."

—Dr. Caldwell gives oatmeal the preference over grains for milch cows, whereas the Country Gentleman remarks that the experience of many farmers who feed for cream and butter do not agree that it is any better than cornmeal, even if as good, especially for butter in the winter, that from oats being comparatively white. Mix the two and have a feed good enough for any dairy.

—An interesting experiment, showing the evil effects of worry on the quality of a cow's milk, is reported by the Connecticut Experimental Station. A new cow was bought and turned in with a strange herd. She had been recommended as a rich milker, but her milk yielded no cream. On analysis it showed solids, per cent., 11.28; fat, per cent., 2.16. This cow had been a pet, and when put by herself the milk showed, solids, per cent., 15.08, and fat, per cent., 5.54. This is a remarkable exhibit.—American Dairyman.

—There is an essence of truth in this: "It is from the dairies where the belief exists that cream can be bewitched, and over the doors of which horseshoes are nailed for luck, that much of the poor butter comes." "It is only when all natural conditions are spontaneously favorable that such people ever make good butter." And, alas! how seldom they find the elements all favorable, and how often these people spoil a good thing, that could in such favorable times almost make itself, by some bad practice that no amount of warning can induce them to abandon. Frequently the butter will be almost perfect up to the middle process of working, and if they would only let it alone there would be an almost perfect article; but no, that everlasting paddle must go on sliding over the butter until the last vestige of grain has left it and nothing but a slick mass of grease remains. Working by rule is a good principle, but sometimes there is more rule than principle, just as the old darky said about the rule that every dog has his day. Sometimes there are more dogs than days.—Exchange.

—How many cows should be the task for a milker? It is commonly stated from six to ten, and "the writer" says that one summer he was one of three milkers in a herd of fifty cows, and he is convinced that five milkers could have obtained twenty per cent. more milk. In every dairy there are seasons of extra milk yields, and also of extra dry cows, so that it is hard to state exactly what a "task" should be. Some of the best handled dairies we have ever seen had but five milkers to a hundred cows, but they were milkers as were milkers, and of course at no one time were all the cows giving milk, while, vice versa, so to speak, we have seen six milkers fail with one cow. Much depends upon the men and the cows. A man could milk nearly twice as many Jerseys as he could Holsteins—that is, we mean Dutch or Friesian cattle. We say let every man work according to his capacity and his cows, but do not crowd him so that he will slight any of them. Above all, as we have often remarked before, put the best milker to the meanest cows. The reverse of this rule will not work.—The Dairy.

What Our Cows are Doing.

It has been estimated that the average cow of the United States gives about five quarts of milk per day through the year, or 1,800 quarts in all. For a period of three hundred days, allowing the cows to go dry sixty-five days, this would equal a yield of six quarts per day, which is probably not very far out of the way. It is also estimated that about one-half of all the milk produced in the country is converted into butter and cheese, the other half being used at home or sold for family use in the towns and cities. It probably requires about twenty-seven pounds of milk to yield a pound of butter, and ten pounds for a pound of cheese by the ordinary methods practiced.

The number of milch cows in the country is set at 15,000,000, which is doubtless nearly correct. Over 12,000,000 upon farms, are reported in the last census, and there are many others kept by villagers, one to a family. The product of each cow is nearly all consumed by three persons. Each inhabitant, on the average, consumes about a pint and a half of milk daily, in the form of food and drink, and as much more in the shape of butter and cheese. There is the same amount of nutriment in three and a half pounds of milk as there is in one pound of beef. To furnish in the form of beef the equivalent to the milk yielded in a single year, by our 15,000,000 milch cows, would require the slaughtering of 24,000,000 fat steers weighing, on an average, 1,500 pounds each. Surely, the cow is worthy of much respect, and the best of treatment.—New England Farmer.

Feed For the Family Cow.

Many query as to the proper food for the family cow when in milk. Bran is always good, and the heavier the better. Cotton seed meal has a large proportion of milk-forming food, and if fed in small quantities is a valuable food. It is, however, very stimulating to milk production and must not be fed to excess. The cow will also need some starchy foods, which is partly supplied by cornstalks and hay, but a little corn meal is necessary to make enough of this. Corn meal and oats ground together makes good feed. Five pounds of bran, four pounds of corn meal and two pounds of cotton seed meal per day to a fair-sized cow in full milk will not be too much, and with the coarse fodder usually fed will give satisfactory returns. Many consider buckwheat bran valuable, but we prefer wheat bran as being more digestible, which answers the same purpose as being richer.—Detroit Post.

THE first exportation of cotton from America was in 1784, and consisted of eight bags, or bales. The shipment was so large that the English officials had doubts about it having been raised in the United States. FROM the edition of Messrs. Geo. P. Rowell & Co's American Newspaper Directory, now in press, it appears that the newspapers and periodicals of all kinds at present issued in the United States and Canada reach the grand total of 13,402. This is a net gain of precisely 1,600 during the last twelve months, and exhibits an increase of 5,618 over the total number published just ten years since. The increase in 1874 over the total for 1873 was 498. During the past year the dailies have increased from 1,138 to 1,254; the weeklies from 9,062 to 10,028; and the monthlies from 1,091 to 1,490. The greatest increase is in the Western States. Illinois, for instance, now shows 1,009 papers in place of last year's total of 904, while Missouri issues 604 instead of 523 reported in 1883. Other leading Western States also exhibit a great percentage of increase. The total number of papers in New York State is 1,523, against 1,399 in 1883. Canada has shared in the general increase.

THE knotty question of what is to be done with the jail again confronts the grand jury. The last grand jury took the bull by the horns and by an almost unanimous vote condemned the building as totally unfit to confine human beings in. The action of the grand jury was ordered to be and was duly certified to the county court, where a committee composed of its members was appointed and the jail question that originated in the grand jury room referred to it. The committee did not consider the jail as horrible and as offensive both in appearance and oder as did the grand jury, but thought some improvement could be made, but as yet nothing has been done. Thus, we have had two bodies legally authorized to investigate the jail, do so, and their reports are very conflicting. Of course the present grand jury will investigate the jail, and we will soon see whether or not it will reverse the decision of its predecessor.

Since the above was put in type we have learned that the committee appointed by the county court has not made its report, and is verry undecided what is best to do, wanting to take such action as will result in securing the best jail possible under all the circumstances.

Pursuant to published notice there was a convention of the Republicans begun and held at Burlington, on Monday, April 7th, 1884.

On motion the minutes of this convention are directed to be published in the Boone County RECORDER.

On motion this convention is now adjourned without a day.

J. M. THOMASON, Sect'y.

IN his charge to the grand jury, Judge Major treated at considerable length the offense of carrying concealed weapons, appealing to the jury to investigate thoroughly that offense, which he pronounced a crying evil all over his distrist. He then took up the subject of public building and laid down the law prescibing the duties of the County Courts in regard to providing good and suitable jails. The charge throughout was delivered in good style, and the jury was very attentive and a large crop of indictments may be looked for.

EIGHT prisoners escaped from the Green county, Ark., jail by assaulting the jailer. A posse of citizens pursued them, and in the fight which followed one of the prisoners was killed and three others captured.

KANSAS LETTER.

WELLINGTON, KS., Apr, 7, 1884.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

We had a gentle zephyr last Thursday afternoon that tore up the side walks and demolished a few buildings; otherwise it did no damage in town. Reports came in from the country a few days since that two large prairie fires were destroying everything they came to. Three men and several head of stock were reported to burned death, while corn cribs, barns and dwellings were destroyed.

This is a grand country and I am delighted with it. Wheat is from 6 to 12 inches high; corn all planted and some of it up and growing nicely; gardens look nicely, and we have onions and raddishes of home growth on our tables.

Everything looks flourishing. The town of Harper and surrounding country is on a big boom.

I met, this morning, for the first time, a band of Indians, and they were a curious looking people to me.

Tell the boys who like to hunt to come out, there is plenty of game here. Every evening, from my door, I see wolves prowling around, and they make the night musical with their howls. Badgers are numerous, also wild geese, turkeys, ducks and chickens. Parties go from here down into the territory every fall to hunt buffalo, bear and deer.

1,800 kegs of beer were taken from the vats at Petersburg and shipped to Covington after the distillery fire. These vats were burned very thin, but retained their contents. The bulk of corn, rye and barley were burning lively yet last Monday.

The "mill" which came off without any previous notice at Rabbit Hash, last Saturday, created quite a little breeze in that hitherto quite city. It was gotten upon such short notice that there was no time in which to choose seconds or put up the ropes.

H. P. Stephens has a Florida production at his house, in the shape of an alligator about six inches long. This pet has been fasting ever since it became Perry's property, consequently he calls it Dr. Tanner.

Judge Major's sojourn here in God's country has had quite a rejuvinating effect on the Judge, and he mounted the bench Monday morning and set the judicial machine in motion, and will manifest his usual industry during the term, disposing of every case in which litigants and attorneys can possibly try.

The Northern Indianian aptly and truly says: When a subscriber sees the publisher of his home paper cutting down its price to $1.25, $1.00 or 50 cents for a year, he may keep his eye skinned; something is going to happen, as no country journal of any standing can be furnished at any such prices.

In this impression will be found the advertisement of the Wood Self-binder harvester, and mowing machines for which Esquire Oscar Gaines is agent. The judicial festival is in progress at the Court-house this week. Bally vs. Bonn; Anderson vs. Lewis, &c., and Grant vs. Gaines, all large damage suits, are on Friday's programme. These are the most interesting on the season's programme, and the demand for reserved seats may exceed the supply that day.

The rotting of the sleepers, resulting in the giving away of a portion of the floor in the Court-room, was caused by there being no ventilation for the space between the floor and earth. When the workmen took the damaged sleepers out they were honeycombed by the dry rot, which is a natural consequence where foundations are not arranged for ventilation.

The rocky springs down on Middle Creek, which was a local curiosity, and sent forth a crystal stream in which there was no perceptible increase or decrease in size since discovered by the white man, not long since suspended operation rather suddenly. The water had worn a deep groove in a large rock over which it ran, and which it must have taken centuries to accomplish.

Some time since our Beaver correspondent gave an account of the stealing of a lot of tobacco in his neighborhood. Last week, John Shawhan, against whom there is pretty good proof of his being one of the thieves, was arrested and taken before Esquire Norman and Bannister, of Union, who, considering the proof sufficient to hold him over, committed him to jail last Saturday in default of $200 bail, and the case will be investigated by the grand jury this week.

On Thursday, the jury returned a bill against James Acra and James Warner charging them with robbing Mr. Smith of a watch and money to the value of $33. They were brought into court, and plead not guilty, had counsel assigned for their defense, and in default of $2,000 bail were remanded to jail. They will not be tried at this term of court, as Mr. Smith is not able to attend court as a witness in the case.—Rising Sun Recorder.

Mr. Smith was severely tortured by the parties who robbed him, being unmercifully beaten and burned by them, and the guilty parties, whoever they are, are worse than demons.

Palmer will not put you off until next week, but says now.

Last Sunday, Mr. Orlando Snyder load to the hymenial alter, Miss Fannie Corbin, daughter of Albert Corbin, of Bellevue. The ceremony was performed by Elder E. Stephens at his residence in Kenton county. Bud was approaching the meridian of life, and we had about reached the conclusion that he was a matrimonial lucrelle, but are glad that we were mistaken in the composition of the man, and trust that he and his bride will find the path leading up life's steep declivity strewn with flowers, and when they commence descending in the path of life that leads to eternity, that they can look back over a prosperous and well spent life. And now Bud, all that is required of you to make you lead a long, happy and prosperous life is enlist your name with the RECORDER family.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Florence X-Roads.

There has been a good many potatoes planted.

The prospects for buscuit and apple dumplings are flattering.

Oats about all sown. The early sown clover is about all killed.

F. H. Russell has four cars loaded with logs and lumber at Erlanger, for Cincinnati.

Chas. Stephens and Wm. Houston were visiting the fair belles at this place last Sunday.

There has been quite a building boom in Lickskillet this spring. E. Anderson and Richard Tanner have each built a new dwelling.

Bellville.

As your correspondent at Scattersville is a little slow at times, we have concluded to send in some news from this place.

The health of this village is very good at present.

Mrs. J. A. Kirtley was visiting her mother last week.

The wheat in this section is looking well, and there was a large crop sown.

The farmers are all busy making fence and turning the soil for corn and tobacco.

James Henderson is still keeping house by himself. That is very strange, Jimmie.

Mrs. Huey, mother of J. O. Huey fell off the fence one day last week, and broke her leg.

H. P. Parsons grinds here one Saturday and at his other mill on Big Bone Creek the next.

It is a little too cool for the boys to fish much although some have been trying their luck.

From what we can hear and see, there will be about 100 acres of tobacco plant ed in this section of the country.

W. M. Stamper, our clever store keeper has moved down on his farm on the creek, but will still continue the store.

Taylorport.

We forgot to announce the name of our mashing Dude—it is Jas. Berry, jr.

Tete Grubbs and brother-in-law, Bert Breed and family leave for Dakota this week.

Henry Parson has erected a new residence on the spot his old one stood before the flood of 1884.

Morgan Helm had recovered from the malarial sufficiently to be able to walk about town, but a second attack has again confined him to his bed.

We are on the increase in every respect since the flood. Jas. Berry, sr., wishes to announce to the public that his ferry is in better shape than ever.

Misses Jennie Mitchell and Clara Clore, of Florence, were the guests of Morgan Helm one day last week, singular to relate a popular gentleman friend of ours was there the same day.

The largest contract that has been taken for buildings in this place was taken last week by John Lacey—contract was let by Jas. Steelman. It is a four story dwelling on the corner of Main St., and Cleveland Avenue. It is rumored it will be used as a hotel.

Beaver Lick.

Rev. Lester of the old school persuasion, delivered quite an interesting sermon at the Baptist church here last Wednesday, at 11 o'clock a. m.

Dr. John A. Wood, of Ludlow, is with us this week negotiating for a home in Beaver. Our people are glad Doc is preparing to locate with us.

J. C. Hughes has on his pasture near Beaver, 117 head of the finest short horn beef cattle that ever nipped the growing bluegrass around these parts.

Once again we repeat it, a good shoemaker could find paying employment in Beaver. Any one seeing any other one seeking such a job should direct them to Beaver.

Corn is scarcer now in this vicinity than for many years. If Kansas doesn't ship us a car load pretty soon, it will be a tight wrestle our stock will have to stand with grim death.

Last week some of our sporting fraternity filled their grip sack and stepped over the county line to sojourn with their uncle while the law enforcing, g. j. (which doesn't mean grant Jeshiphat) continueth in session.

Many of our farmers are jubilant over the discovery of tobacco plants up and growing in their canvassed beds. This fact adds vigor to our tobacco culturists and threatens a big crop are made operate; and I might say without provocation.

Our yeomanry are about done turning over the sod and are beginning to plow stalk and stubble land. A large number of acres of land has been sowed in clover and timothy hereabout this spring, our farmers are beginning to look on good pastures as the correct thing.

Union.

H. P. Stephens and wife, who have lately become residents of Burlington, are very much missed in the social circle.

If Union is of one-twentieth as much importance to our neighbors as to us they are anxious to hear of its proceedings.

Elder P. G. Lester, of Virginia, visited here all of last week, and while here delivered three very interesting discourses to good audiences.

Mrs. L. V. Aulick has given up boarding and gone to housekeeping, where she will be more conveniently situated to entertain her many friends.

The Presbyterian Sunday-school is in a flourishing condition, and celebrated the Easter Sunday by very appropriate and interesting exercises. The Baptist school with C. T. Rice as superintendent promises good.

Miss Mary Wilkie left for Richmond, Va., last Thursday to visit her brother-in-law, R. F. Woodward who is the proprietor and editor of a very bright little sheet dubbed the "Capitol"..... ALI'S PUNISHMENT.

Ali Ben Achmet, from his tent,
Looked out upon the firmament.

He saw the wonder of the skies
And watched the pallid moon arise;

And mused upon the promise made
By Allah's angel, fire arrayed,

Who, in a dream long years ago,
Had spoken to him soft and low:

"Thy deeds of good have won this grace
That some day thou shalt see my face.

"Ask not when this reward shall be,
But some day I will come to thee;

"Be ready to receive, therefore,
Great Allah's angel at thy door."

Long years had passed o'er Ali's head,
Since those first words of hope were said;

But every night before his door
Ali had placed from out his store

Half his supply of dates and bread,
And milk, and rich pomegranates red,

And watched, to guard them from the clutch
Of hungry hand's profaning touch.

"Touch not," he said, "these things are stored
To wait the angel of the Lord."

And as he sat and prayed, that night,
The angel came in glory bright.

Ali fell low upon his face:
"Allah, I thank thee for this grace."

Then rising, to his door he went;
"Enter, I pray, thy servant's tent."

"Nay," said his guest, "I go not in;
The tent is one defiled by sin!"

Poor Ali stood in sore surprise:
"Is my life sinful in thine eyes?

"Have I not given all my days
To Allah's love and Allah's praise?

"See here, where lies the wasted sum
Of food, laid by lest thou should come."

"There," said the angel, "lies thy sin,
Forbidding me to enter in.

"For how shall I take joy in food
That did no human being good?

"The sick and poor whom thou'st denied,
The hungry, who still hungry died,

"These hadst thou fed with what I see,
The gift would have been made to me."

Ali Ben Achmet bent his head;
"Allah hath punished pride," he said.

A NIGHT OF ADVENTURE.

In the spring of the year 1877, when the Russians were pushing their victorious forces towards the city of their conquered foe, and England was waiting, apprehensive of the result, I had the fortune to be attached to a depot battery of garrison artillery in the Southern District. At that time there was a great scarcity of subalterns in the Royal Regiment, and I found myself the only officer of that rank in a battery of recruits some two hundred strong. As may be imagined, I had quite as much work on my hands as I cared for.

It was with mingled feelings that I heard the news that Lord Beaconsfield had determined on calling out the Reserves. On the one hand the act seemed prophetic of imminent war, with all the chances of promotion and distinction that such a prospect opens to the soldier; while on the other there was the immediate certainty of plenty of additional hard work, and of ending trouble with men just transferred from their civil occupations to the stirring life of the army. On the whole, however, I think I rather enjoyed the excitement offered by the change.

One morning I was called into the Colonel's office, informed that a large detachment of the reserve was to join my battery from Wales, and that I was to proceed thither immediately with a trustworthy Sergeant and bring them to the depot. The Colonel did not scruple to tell me that he would not have intrusted so difficult a task to an officer with as little experience and length of service as myself had he had any other to send; but as there was no one available, he must make a virtue of necessity, and hoped I would prove worthy of the confidence reposed in me. At the same time, he gave me to understand that, once the men were in my charge, I should be held responsible for any who managed to desert or otherwise absent themselves on the journey.

I always disliked responsibility, and had, moreover, an idea—whether well or ill founded I shall not pause to consider—that the small pay of a subaltern was not intended to cover any duties of great importance, but was merely an income drawn for the performance of certain fixed pieces of routine, such as visiting guards, going round to inspect the men's dinners, and so on. I can not, therefore, say that I at all relished the order I had just received, especially since I could very well realize the difficulty of conveying forty rude Welsh miners so long a distance through a country unknown to them. I only stipulated, however, that the Sergeant who was to be my companion should be a man I knew and could trust, and who could talk Welsh on occasion. Fortunately, just such a one as I needed was available, and we started on our journey determined to make the best of it.

I do not intend here to give an account of the manner in which I carried out my mission, though, indeed, some of the incidents were amusing enough. I was compelled perforce to stay longer than I had intended in Wales, gathering my men together, and on the morning of our final departure half the population of the country seemed to be collected together to see us off. Had there been the least unwillingness on the part of the new recruits to join, I should have been quite unable to muster them among the crowds that attended; but both they and their relatives were only too willing to serve her Majesty and to drink her health. Man after man was carried aloft by his admiring friends, dead drunk, and thrust into the carriages anywhere and anyhow, till my number was complete, and the amused engine-driver could at length start his train. Of the whole party, I think that myself, my Sergeant and a single total abstainer, who happened to be the sole one of my men who could speak a word of English, were the only persons sober. I kept my charges well supplied with liquor, in defiance of all precedent, carried them from Euston to London Bridge in a couple of omnibuses, and had them all safely housed in barracks before they well knew they had started. I fear some of them must have felt very ill the day after, but that, of course, I could not help.

But the adventure I am about to relate had little to do with my reserve men. It took place on the second night after my arrival in Wales. My Sergeant and I had taken up quarters in a little out-of-the-way village on the coast, not far from the Menai Straits. For many reasons I do not care to give its name. We had arrived there late in the evening, as darkness was drawing on, and, by use of my companions knowledge of the language, had found out the position of the only place of entertainment that was available—a little inn situated at some distance from the town. I was struck, on approaching it, by the wild and picturesque beauty of the locality. It was perched on the top of a high cliff, which seemed almost to overhang the sea below; and, between the door and the verge of the perpendicular descent, unguarded by fence or rail, nothing intervened but a patch of grass, blackened and withered by the spray cast up by the westerly gales of the equinox, and not more than four yards wide. Why the builder should have selected such a spot was not easy to say. Perhaps he was a man who loved the wild moods of the ocean, and found them harmonize with those of his own soul. It looked the very place for some terrible scene of midnight murder and violence, such as so often happened in the old smuggling days.

The house itself was a good one, and the landlord, as he came to the door to welcome us, seemed a quiet, good-natured looking man. He showed us to our rooms, and served our supper in a lofty chamber whose windows looked out upon the sea, that already began to moan through the rocky caves and passes with the restless motion that foretells a rising storm.

After supper my Sergeant strolled down to the village to see his men and arrange about getting them together in the morning; and the landlord, with whom he had struck up an acquaintance, accompanied him to show him the persons he required. Before leaving the house he said something to my comrade in Welsh.

"He says, sir" said the Sergeant, saluting, "that he hopes you won't mind being left alone in the house for an hour or two. No one will intrude upon you. There is one other gentleman stopping here, but he is out now and most likely won't be back till morning. He is a man who goes about with a hammer collecting bits of rock."

"Ah, a geologist," I replied. "No. I have no objection to be left alone. I would come down to the village with you, but that I am tired, and I think I will just smoke a pipe and go to bed."

This message being duly translated to my host he made me a bow and the two started off, shutting the door after them. I lit my pipe and made myself comfortable with a couple of chairs by the fire. There is no more sleepy occupation than watching tobacco smoke curling upwards, and I soon fell into a doze. I do not know how long I had slept when I was awakened by a stir in the [illegible] at once that the "other gentleman" had returned sooner than he was expected, and was now regarding me with some interest.

He was a man of about thirty-five, tall and well-made, dressed in a thick frieze suit, with a belt of the same material round the waist. In his hand were a bag of fossils and rock specimens and a geologist's hammer. These he laid on the table, and then came over and shook hands with me.

"I did not expect to meet a gentleman in this out-of-the-way place," he said. "No one comes here unless it be to follow such pursuits as mine, or from a love of seeing Nature unspoiled by man's handiwork."

I was glad of some company, and told him what had brought me there. He set my mind somewhat at ease by saying that, from what he had seen of the people, he thought my task would be simple enough; and then we drifted into an interesting conversation. He was, I found, a clever, well-read man, and we got on excellently together, but I noticed now and then an anxious watching expression in his eyes for which I could not account. I was not, however, much of a judge of physiognomy, and did not trouble myself with theories on the subject.

As we were talking the moan of the sea grew louder and louder, and at length came a sudden dash of wind and rain against the windows. The gale was beginning in earnest.

What followed I can scarcely expect my readers to believe, and indeed, looking back on it now as I sit in my cosy quarters, with the lamp burning brightly on the table, I could almost think that I had been the victim of some terrible hallucination; but it was real enough to me that night.

After the first impetuous gust of the storm there came a pause of stillness, and in the unnatural tension of the nerves that one feels in such an interval of expectancy I heard, as clearly as ever I heard anything in my life, a woman's voice outside the window crying in a wailing tone: "O, Jack, Jack!"

"She will be blown over the cliff!" I cried. "What can she be doing there?" and I rose to open the door.

My companion did not answer a word. I glanced at him and saw that his face, lips and all, had paled to a ghastly whiteness. His eyes were fixed upon the window with an expression of such deadly fear as I hope I may never see again.

It was useless to expect help from him, so, mentally setting him down as an arrant coward, I ran to the house door and opened it, intending to let in the wayfarer whose voice I had heard.

As I raised the latch the wind rushed in with impetuous violence and nearly tore the door from my hand. A cold dash of mingled spray and rain struck me full in the face.

"Come in whoever you are," I cried, impatiently. "I can't hold the door open all night."

There was no answer. I stepped outside and looked around. There was a full moon that night, and though the clouds were thick there was a glimmer of light sufficient to see any object within a few yards' distance. There was a phosphorescent luster on the sea that gleamed brightly now and then as the waves broke out on the rocks, and a frightened sea bird almost brushed my face as it flew past. But of the woman I expected to see there was no trace whatever.

Puzzled and irritated I walked round the house to see where she could have gone. At the back of the building there was a broad, open field, without any trees or shrubs that could serve as a hiding-place. It seemed impossible that any one could have crossed it and got out of sight during the few moments that had elapsed since I heard the cry: nevertheless, such had evidently been the case, for there was no one there.

I went in again and closed the door, determined to think twice before I went to the trouble of opening it again, whoever might demand admittance. My companion was sitting just as I left him, with the same look on his face. I spoke to him twice, but received no answer. Fearing he might be in a fit I went over to him and raised his arm. It felt stiff and unnatural. I went to the table for some water, intending to dash it in his face and rouse him if possible.

Hardly had I made a step forward when the same voice I had heard before sounded once more from without. This time there was no mistaking the intense agony of the tone. I had never heard anything in the least like it and it rooted me to the spot where I stood. The words it spoke were, "Come, come, come!" three times repeated.

To my great surprise, the man I had believed in a dangerous fit rose and moved toward the door. I can scarcely describe the way in which he walked. It was as though his whole nature was striving to prevent the action, and yet some stronger power compelled him to advance. I saw him raise the latch of the outer door and then I followed him to see what would ensue. I never even thought of speaking to him; I could feel that were I to do so he would not hear.

The storm had reached its height as we left the house. The spray was driving in clouds across the little patch of grass, and now and then a piece of white foam, blown up from the seething caldron below, would fly past us into the darkness beyond. The man made but one step from the doorway and stood still, with his eyes fixed on the sea. He seemed entirely insensible to the war of the elements and to the lash of the rain in his face. Something beyond outward sensations had absorbed all his faculties for the time being. We stood thus a moment, and then coming now from the ocean itself or the air above it, sounded those words again, "Come, come, come!" My companion made another step or two straight onwards.

"Are you mad?" I cried, as I sprang forward and caught him in my arms. "One pace more and you will be over the cliff! Where are you going?"

He heeded me no more than if I had been myself a phantom of the tempest instead of a being of flesh and blood. I felt that I had no power to restrain him, so I shifted my hold and caught him round the knees. We fell together on the ground at the very verge of the precipice.

Then began a terrible struggle. He fought with the strength of a madman, I with the desperation of a man who contends for his life. The storm howled about us, and the whole air seemed full of mocking voices, shrieks and laughter. Slowly but surely he was dragging me to the edge. I would gladly have r[e]leased him now to save myself, but he would not loose his hold. Soon I felt that he had got himself half over the cliff, and I knew that I was too exhausted to hold on much longer. Nearer and nearer I came to the fatal spot. I gave myself up for lost, and tried my best to frame a prayer. At least, I thought, if I die, it is in a good cause.

Suddenly a strong hand caught me by the collar and drew me violently back. The wretched man lost his clutch of me and fell. A long shriek came up from below and mingled with the exulting shriek of the wind.

I was borne into the house and laid on a couch. I am not given to fainting, but it was some moments before my nerves could recover the shock they had received. At length I looked about me and saw my Sergeant, the landlord, and another well-dressed man whose face I did not know.

"Well, sir," the Sergeant was saying to the latter, "your work seems to have been taken out of your hands to-night. We were only just in time!"

"Only just in time, indeed!" was the answer. "Now, sir, I see you are yourself again; and I must ask you to tell me how the scene came about that we were fortunate enough to interfere in. I am a police officer from Bow street."

As well as I could, I told him all that had occurred. He heard me to the end quietly, and the Sergeant, meanwhile, at the earnest request of the landlord, translated the story into Welsh as I went on. When I had finished the detective shook his head.

"I see I must make up the best tale I can for my superiors," he said. "No offense to you, sir; but they wouldn't believe a word of what you have just been telling me. I can't say just what I think about it myself; I never heard of such a case before. Why, he must have gone quite mad! I knew he was very fond of the woman, and I thought something of the kind was likely; but what you told me you heard is beyond me, I confess. Had you known anything of the murder sir?"

"No," said I; "surely you don't mean to tell me that that man was a murderer?"

"He was, indeed, sir, and I came here to-night to arrest him. He had evaded us all for the last week; but yesterday I got a clew as to where he had gone, and followed him down. I got your Sergeant here to act interpreter for me with the landlord, when I met them both in the village, and from what he said I knew that his 'quiet gentlemen who collected bits of rock' was the man I was after; so I came on here at once, and you know the rest. It was lucky for you that we did not enter the house by the back way. Five minutes more would have done for you, sir!"

"They would, indeed," I answered, shuddering a little at the recollection. "But who, then, did he murder?"

"His own wife, sir; a woman from all accounts as fond of him as she could be. Some one I have yet to find, forged a letter that made him think she had ceased to care for him. I fancy he was always subject to fits of madness; anyhow, no one knows exactly how it happened, but she was found dead in her bed, with the marks of fingers on her throat, and he had disappeared, taking with him all the loose money he had in the house. He had a good sum lying in the bank, which he could have withdrawn at any time by writing a check, and his not having done so is a proof to me that he had not premeditated the murder. I daresay the temptation came to him all on a sudden—it usually does, I have observed. Anyhow, he is dead now, poor gentleman, and may God have mercy on his soul!"

"Amen," I answered.

That is the story of my night of adventure. I have often thought over what appears the supernatural part of it since, but without much effect. The only theory I can frame to account for it is the somewhat lame one that the hallucinations of my mad companion were so powerful that his mind had succeeded in impressing them upon my own, as the mesmerizer can force an idea upon his patient. I confess I am not myself satisfied with such an explanation; but if any of my readers have not a better one ready they must take it for the true one.—London Society.

—That's my uncle over there," said a fast young man to his fast companion; "we're pretty near broke, and I'll strike him for a raise. He won't go back on me. Bet you the drinks I'll strike him for a ten and get it. The bet was made and the young man "struck" his uncle. A long conversation ensued. Finally the young man returned, his face flushed with triumph and some bills in his hands. "I told you I'd make it," he said; "may be we can make a hit on roulette with this." Then his companion looked at the bills, and there were only two one-dollar notes. "But you didn't get ten dollars, did you?" he inquired. Yes I did," replied the nephew, as his tone changed to one of sadness, "only I had to take the other eight dollars out in good advice."—Chicago Herald.

—The true idea of farm life is to build up a comfortable home, not a temporary stopping place for a year or five years, or until it can be sold. It is next to impossible for a man to put the same zeal and thoughtful, painstaking work upon such a farm as on one that he intends to be his and his family's so long as they need one.—Chicago Journal.

—A copy of the proceedings of the New York State Agricultural Society contains condensed reports from fifty three counties of that State, giving the names of such varieties of the potato as have succeeded the best in those different localities. The Burbank was placed at the head of the list in thirty-four counties, beauty of Hebron in nine counties, early rose in six, Chili in two, and conqueror and late rose in one each. Among those which stood high, but not first, were mammoth, pearl, snowflake, white elephant, early Ohio, James Vick and queen of the valley.—N. Y. Sun

—Gath thus describes scenes at a famous dairy farm in Pennsylvania: "I was interested in two things in this stable. In the first place, the cream separator, which is run by a steam engine, revolves with enormous rapidity, and the cream flows out of one spigot and the skimmed milk out of another. Then I observed the apparatus for cleaning cows, which are carefully washed and brushed once or twice a day by means of brushes operated by the engine. The cow or calf or bull is brought forward and tied to the post, and from above these brushes are brought to her body and carefully raise every hair.

Feeding a Family Cow.

The question is by no means so simple as may at first sight appear. The question, in fact, might well serve as a text for a treatise on the whole theory and practice of feeding dairy stock. But this is hardly what M. desires in this place. I have fed a "family cow," and I have fed as many as fifty cows, and I have learned that a ration for the best results in milk is necessarily an expensive one. It requires a large per centage of albuminoids, and albuminoids, either in the food of man or beast are expensive in their original state. But in preparing many of the foods of man, there are by-products or residues, of highly albuminoid nature, admirably adapted to the requirements of herbivorous animals. Such are the hulls of the various grains, under various names—malt, sprouts, brewers' grains, cotton-seed, flax-seed, and many other seeds after the oil has been extracted.

All these, in some sense waste products, are within the reach of stock feeders at prices which make it possible to use them with some degree of profit. Now the feeder will find that these by-products vary considerably in price in different parts of the country, and in selecting his feed he must choose those substances which yield the largest percentage of digestible albuminoids for the least money. In the Eastern States, selecting the period of lowest market, we find nothing cheaper—nothing more economical—than a first quality St Louis bran. It should have a thick, heavy hull, with a film of flour adhering to the inner surface. It seldom exceeds one cent a pound. It is always safe to feed in any quantity.

Next in economy comes cotton-seed meal. But this feed is generally regarded with some prejudice, and I am inclined to think justly. It is very stimulating to the milk glands, and, unless fed with prudence, produces inflammation of the milk ducts and udder. Three pounds a day may be fed, however, to a cow weighing a thousand pounds, without much risk. A good substitute for cotton-seed meal, though more expensive, is linseed meal (old process). This is always safe and a most satisfactory food.

A proper milk ration should contain, in addition to highly albuminoid food, a certain proportion of easily digested hydro-carbons, or starchy foods. The long fodder usually fed to cows contains these elements in abundance, but in a form less available, that is, digestible, than in most ground grains. So, "for quick returns," it is always well to supplement the hydro-carbons in hay, straw, corn-stalks, etc., by a certain amount of corn meal. No other grain, on the whole, better serves the purpose, on the ground of economy, than fine corn meal.

For my dairy of thoroughbreds I have settled down upon the following mixture for a grain ration: For cows in full flow of milk I find a theoretical excess of albuminoids to give economical returns. The proportions given are, by weight, six parts best bran, three parts fine corn meal, and three parts linseed meal. One pound of this mixture is given to each hundred-weight of the animal; half in the morning and the other half in the evening. If fed dry, the cow drinks more, and consequently gives more milk. If I were not skeptical as to the use of cottonseed meal, I should substitute it for linseed meal. It costs less and produces more milk.

If I were feeding a "family cow" regardless of expense, and for quality as well as quantity of milk, I would grind corn in the ear, and add an equal bulk of ground oats. A ration would be four quarts night and morning, with a quart of linseed meal in addition. For long fodder I would feed oat hay; that is, oats cut when just out of blossom and quickly cured. No forage crop I have ever raised gives such results in milk. I can assure M. that it does pay to cut cornstalks. Cut them two inches long, and sprinkle moderately with salt water, twenty-four hours before feeding. Give no more salt than is required for health.—Cor. Country Gentleman.

Nice Roosters.

About twenty gentlemen assembled in a parlor in Harlem the other day and witnessed a couple of shake-bag cock fights. The battles were not worth more than a passing notice, but the circumstances attending the main deserve special mention. Invitations to the affair had been issued by the owner of the house for an afternoon "tea," and the guests appeared in full dress. That they were aware of the nature of the tea was apparent, as the sum total of their conversation was, "I'll lay even that the ginger-red wins," or "I'll take five to four on the black red."

It was nearly 4 o'clock before the host announced that a pit had been constructed in his back parlor, prefixing his remarks by assuring his friends that his wife was absent on a visit to her mother. Then his friends drank success to his wife and her ma in champagne.

Although there were but $50 as a main stake to each battle, much money changed hands on the results. After the fights the pit was torn down and a "tea" and musical entertainment followed.—New York World.

Developments in Cancer Treatment.

Mr. W. H. Gilbert, Albany, Ga., says: "A gentleman named Moore, near this city, had an eating cancer on his face, which had eaten away his nose and his under lip, and had extended up until it had nearly reached his eye. The cancer was eating his gums and had rendered his teeth so loose that he thought they might at any time drop out. He has been taking SWIFT'S SPECIFIC about three months, and it's effect has been wonderful. It has driven the poison from his system, the cancer has healed greatly, his teeth have become strong again, and he thinks he has been rescued from an awful death. He is the most enthusiastic man I ever saw."

Figures Won't Lie.

The figures showing the enormous yearly sales of Kidney-Wort demonstrate its value as a medicine beyond dispute. It is a purely vegetable compound of certain roots, leaves and berries known to have special value in Kidney troubles. Combined with these are remedies acting directly on the Liver and Bowels. It is because of this combined action that Kidney-Wort has proved such an unequaled remedy in all diseases of these organs.

TO OUR READERS.

The proprietors of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS and BRANDRETH'S PILLS will publish for the next few weeks in this paper some of the many cures that these remedies have effected.

If you are in need of medicine give them a trial. They guarantee them to be made of the purest and best drugs that money can buy, powerful to cure, yet perfectly harmless.

ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER is the standard of excellence and like all good things largely imitated. The public is especially cautioned against all so-called porous plasters, none of which contain the healing gums that Allcock's does, but are made from poor and cheap materials and simply gotten up to sell on the reputation of the genuine article.

OPINION OF DR. MOTT, LATE GOVERNMENT CHEMIST, ON ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER.

My investigation of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER shows it to contain valuable and essential ingredients not present in any other Plaster. These ingredients are so perfectly proportioned that the ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER will not cause Blisters or Excessive Irritation, and I find it superior to and more efficient than any other Plaster. IT WILL PAY YOU,

Or Your Friends, to Read the Following Account of a Cure of Stone in the Kidneys by the Use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy (of Rondout, N. Y.)—A Disease so Serious and Common Should not be Trifled with.

Plain words are best. Mr. Edward S. Hicks, of Pleasant Valley, Dutchess Co., N. Y., has suffered long from Stones in the Kidneys. He sought relief of course. Who would not? What are time and money to health? Mr. Hicks consulted the best physicians of his village and, also, of Poughkeepsie—and none better can be found anywhere—but, unhappily, without a good result. A friend in Rondout advised Mr. Hicks to go to Rondout and see Dr. David Kennedy about his trouble. This Mr. Hicks finally did. Dr. Kennedy saw at once what the suffering man's difficulty was, and that FAVORITE REMEDY was the medicine he needed. The Doctor prescribed it, and Mr. Hicks went home without much confidence in the power of FAVORITE REMEDY to do him more good than other medicines had done before. But hope clings to straws, and he thought there might be one chance out of many in his favor. He followed the directions, and was both surprised and delighted to find himself presently improving. To-day Mr. Hicks is a well man.

Dr. Kennedy continues to practice his profession, and performs all the minor and capital operations in surgery. Write and state your case.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME IX. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, APRIL 23, 1884. NUMBER 25.

WHEAT PROSPECTS.

Reports From Western and Northwestern States.

Winter Wheat Not Already Killed Doing Well, but Spring Wheat Not Promising.

CHICAGO, ILL., April 19.—The Chicago Times this morning prints a comprehensive crop report by counties, embracing the winter and spring wheat belts of Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Nebraska, Dakota, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Missouri. Generally speaking winter wheat not winter killed is now doing well, but spring wheat prospects are not cheering, owing to continued wet and disagreeable weather. In eleven counties in Illinois, winter wheat was extensively injured by freezing weather, and a number of fields have been plowed up, and the prospects are not good for more than half a crop. In the remaining counties, and particularly the upper tier, better reports are received, and a full average crop is predicted. In Central and Southern Missouri winter wheat shows the effect of winter killing, and the coming crop promises about 85 per cent. of the average for the entire State. In Northern Indiana there is now promise of 98 per cent. of the average crop, in central portion 62 per cent., and southern portion 85, which is about the relative condition of the crop in April, 1883. In Kansas there is increased acreage, and no material damage is reported by freezing. In Michigan the acreage will be 8 to 10 per cent. less than last year, and the average crop is expected. Dakota shows a heavily increased acreage, but the weather for the last two weeks has been unfavorable for spring seeding. Increased acreage is predicted for Minnesota, but seeding is delayed. Wisconsin shows a marked falling off in the acreage, and the season is delayed.

Victorious French.

PARIS, April 18.—A telegram from General Millot, commander of the French forces in Tonquin, dated Handoi, April 16, says: "The enemy has again been encountered, not far from Hung Hoa, and completely routed. After the engagement we destroyed the citadels of Phulam and Tram, where the leaders of the Black Flags had taken refuge. Our forces are now following the right bank of the river Dai, with the object of threatening the enemy in the south, and obtaining redress for the massacre of missionaries. The Black Flags have withdrawn to Northern Tonquin. The remnants of the garrisons of Bacninh and Hung Hoa, Chinese and Anamites, to the number of five thousand, have retreated to Hanh Hoa. General Delisle is going to Ninhbin to observe them. In the capture of Phulam and Tram the French lost five soldiers killed and eleven coolies drowned. The French gunboat Lutin has been ordered from Hong Kong to Canton to protect Europeans.

America and Dynamiters.

LONDON, April 19.—The newspapers continue to discuss the duty of the American Government toward dynamiters. The Saturday Review says: "To suppose the American Government would undertake the task of suppressing Irish agitators would be simply asking it to do what the English Government steadily refused to do. Mazzini, who defended political assassination as heartily as any Irishman, and did his best to practice it, was sheltered in England for many years, though it was known that he was continually engaged in conspiracy. Herezen published his inflammatory Kolokol in London, and no request for its suppression was ever listened to. Before the American Government can act it must be shown that the Irish agitators have committed an actual offense going beyond the general incentives to crime. Evidence to that effect has never yet been forthcoming."

LOUIS, April 19.—General Beckwith, who is in charge of the distribution of Government supplies to flood sufferers on the Lower Mississippi River, has received dispatches from St. Joseph, Waterproof, Delta, Hard Times, Wolf Island, and other points, that there is great suffering, among the people at those places, and food needed at once. General Beckwith has ordered supplies purchased, and will also send additional rations from here. General Magruder, of Helena, Ark., also telegraphs that there is great suffering in the Sunk Land region of the St. Francis River, and he has been directed to purchase food, and charter a steamboat to distribute it. Dennett has been running as express messenger on some Western road, but is said to be an Eastern "crook."

Accident at a Wedding.

ERIE, PENN., April 18.—Marriage festivities at the wedding of George Bacon and Miss Eva Estes, of Wattsburg, were broken up by a shocking accident last night. Shortly after the ceremony a number of enthusiastic young men dragged the town cannon opposite the house for the purpose of firing a salvo in honor of the bride. At the first discharge the field-piece burst, tearing off an arm of Wm. Cooper and blinding and otherwise terribly injuring George Weed and John Howland. Two Brothers by the name of Jones were also injured.

The execution was private.

A Terrible Story.

WASHINGTON, April 18.—In the Jeannette investigation to-day the journal of Dr. Ambler, after the ship went down, was put in evidence. The following are extracts: "SUNDAY, October 9, 1881.—Yesterday without food, except alcohol; the captain spoke of giving the men option to-day of making their way the best they could; that he could not keep up. * * * I told him that if he gave up I took command, and that no one should leave him as long as I was alive. I then suggested that we send two men ahead, to try and make a settlement, and that we make the best of our way with the rest of our party. This was done. Nindermann and Noros are ahead—God give them aid!—and we are getting along. The captain gave me the option of going ahead myself, but I thought my duty required me with him and the main body for the present. Lee is about broken down. Alexae has shot three grouse, by the gods, and we will have something to eat."

"WEDNESDAY, October 12.—We have been without food since Sunday, except one ounce of alcohol, one drachm of glycerine, all yesterday and to-day. We have made no progress since Monday. The wind and snow are against us. We have been lying in a hollow in the river bank."

"October 18.—Alexae died last night of exhaustion from hunger and exposure."

The following touching letter from Dr. Ambler to his brother is the last entry in the journal:

THURSDAY, October 30.—To Edward Ambler, Esq., Markham, Va.—My Dear Brother: I write these lines in the faint hope that by God's merciful Providence they may reach you all at home. I have myself now very little hope of surviving. We have been without food nearly two weeks, with the exception of four ptarmigans among eleven of us. We are growing weaker, and for more than a week have had no food. We can barely manage to get wood enough now to keep us warm, and in a day or two that will be passed. I write to you all, my mother, sister, brother Cary and his wife and family, to assure you of the deep love I now and the love I have always borne you. If it had been God's will for me to have seen you all again, I had hoped to once more. My mother knows how my heart has been bound to hers since my earliest years. God bless her on earth and prolong her life in peace and comfort, and may His blessing rest on you all. As for myself, I am resigned, and bow my head in submission to Divine will. My love to my sister and brother Cary. God's blessing on them and you. To all my friends and relatives a long farewell. Let the Howards know that I thought of them to the last, and let Mrs. Pegram also know that she and her nieces were continually in my thoughts. God in his infinite mercy grant that these lines may reach you. I write them in full faith and confidence in the help of our Lord Jesus Christ. Your loving brother,

J. M. AMBLER."

The bill appropriates $25,000, and requires that the work of the Commission shall be completed within three years after the passage of the act.

Incident of Albany's Funeral.

The officer commanding the detachment of the Seaforth Highlanders found that his men were unable to carry the body from the Windsor railway station. The coffins were made in France, and were of extraordinary thickness and size, and weighed about a ton. The officer, without communicating with the authorities, removed the two outer coffins and took out the shell containing the body, covered it with the Union Jack and the pall, and the funeral procession followed the shell. The outer coffins were replaced after the ceremony.

Heavy Landslides in Colorado.

DENVER, COL., April 18.—Since the snow began to melt in the mountains, snow and rock slides of greater or less magnitude are of daily occurrence. Early this morning a large boulder fell on a bridge across the Gunnison, near the mouth of the Cimarron, and smashed it down. In addition to this were half a dozen small slides to-day between Currecanti and a point three miles this side in the Black Canyon. The regular westbound passenger train went as far as the first of these slides and was waiting for workmen to clear the track, when another slide came down, striking the engine, turning it over, instantly killing the engineer, Arthur Bratt, and slightly injuring the fireman, Thomas Martines.

A SINKING TOWN.

The Trouble That is Agitating an Eastern Ohio Town.

Salineville Undermined by a Coal Mine, is Slowly Sinking into the Earth.

CLEVELAND, O., April 20.—A serious state of affair is reported at Salineville, a mining town located between this city and Wheeling. Numerous coal banks located in the hills on which the town stands have been operated for many years. Yesterday afternoon, to the horror of the residents of the place, it was discovered that the ground immediately above Kirk's coal mine was beginning to crack and break in several places. Toward night the situation became still more alarming. To-day people were surprised to find portions of their dwelling and yards slowly sinking into the earth. The wells in the vicinity were found to be empty and bottomless. A large new brick schoolhouse stands on the brow of a hill, and it is the opinion that this structure will be destroyed. At all events, very few children will attend school in the building to-morrow. The cause of the approaching disaster is owing to the extra amount of coal that has been taken from the hills. A young man named William Keras was crushed to death yesterday by a large mass of coal and slate.

A Defaulting Bank President Captured.

CLEVELAND, O., April 20.—A special states that Frank Dewalt, the alleged defaulting president of the First National Bank of Leadville, Col., was arrested early this morning at his mother's house in Canton, and that he will be taken back to Leadville, where a reward of $4,000 is offered for his arrest. Dewalt formerly lived in Canton. Ten years ago he went West, and eventually became president of the bank as stated. Three months ago the bank failed for $250,000, and Dewalt disappeared. An investigation indicated that he took $50,000 with him. He says that he went to Texas and was arrested at Elpaso, but released on a writ of habeas corpus and escaped to Mexico. He then went to Manitoba, and a short time ago went to his mother's home in Canton. He was recognized by numerous acquaintances, and a constable telegraphed to Leadville, inquiring if he was still wanted there. He received an affirmative reply, and the arrest was made. Dewalt professed a willingness to return, and claims that he can clear himself.

Both men were struck by the locomotive, their bodies terribly mangled, heads smashed to a pulp, and are unrecognizable. From papers found in their pockets they are identified as Dr. E. M. Fitzgerald, a well-known veterinary surgeon, of Green Point, and Frank Lyons, proprietor of the Green Point and New York Express. There are gates at the crossing, but the gateman says his time was up for the day, and he did not lower them.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bills on the five-minute calendar, took up the bill to authorize the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the account for arms between South Carolina and the Government of the United States, and to balance the same by so reducing the overcharge made against the State in 1869, under the act of 1808, as that amounts paid on account by South Carolina in the last ten years may be taken in full satisfaction of the account. After some discussion, the bill passed—yeas 30, nays 12. The Senate then passed the bill to authorize and direct the managers of the Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to locate a branch home at some suitable point in either of the States of Arkansas, Colorado, Kansas, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri or Nebraska. —The feet of the common working bee exhibit at one and the same time a basket, a brush and a pair of pincers. One of these articles, indeed, is a brush of extreme fineness, the hairs of which, arranged in symmetrical rows, are only to be seen with the microscope. With this brush of fairy delicacy the bee continually brushes its velvet robe, to remove the pollen dust with which it becomes loaded while rifling the flowers and sucking up their nectar. Another article, which, is hollowed like a spoon, receives all the gleanings which the insect carries to the hive. It is a panier for provisions. Finally, by opening them, one upon another, by means of a hinge, these two pieces become a pair of pincers, which render important service in the construction of the combs, and it is with them that the bee lays hold of semi-circles of wax below its abdomen, and carries them to its mouth.

He thinks he will send her a new spring bonnet and call it square.

THE DAIRY.

—Give the calf the first milk from the cow's udder—the last is often too rich for it.

—The American Dairyman says: A hayseed in a cow's eye will turn it white. It will come all right in a day or two if left alone. If doctored we don't know when it will get well.

—It has been shown that "a pail of milk standing ten minutes where it is exposed to the scent of a strong-smelling stable or any other offensive odor, will receive a taint that will never leave it."

—It is claimed that while cows giving exceptionally large quantities of milk will sometimes make large butter tests, as a rule the two things do not go together, being inconsistent with each other.

—There is a general opinion among old farmers that cows having only three teats are apt to be superior milkers. This is often the fact, and one reason doubtless is, that cows which give large quantities of rich milk are most liable to those injuries from inflammation which so often destroy one of the teats.

—A Pennsylvania farmer writes: "On my farm of 120 acres we kept, during 1883, about 35 cows; the number varied somewhat, a few more in winter than in summer. From these 35 cows we made 8,133½ pounds of butter, which was sold for $3,930.18, or $112 for each cow. Three or four of them were heifers with their first calf, and some others aborted. The calves sold for $143.75.

—The American Dairyman says there is one point that should be deeply impressed upon the dairyman's mind, and that is if he wants to make a first-class article of butter he must churn often. Never let the cream get over three days old, no matter how cold it may be kept. If cold, it will get old, flat and frinky. If sour, the whey will eat up the best butter globules. Churn as often as you can.

—In Maine the number of milch cows has largely increased during the year last past. This is especially the case in those counties which are giving renewed attention to dairying by the factory or by the private dairy systems. A general increase in the number of cows is returned from nearly all the counties. Milch cows have found an increased demand from the Boston market.

—Some dairymen think at this season of the year, when cows are shedding their coats, they should be furnished with scratching posts. They certainly seem to enjoy rubbing the hair off, while the act can do them no harm. If you ever had a piece of itch in the center of your back, you would appreciate the old saying: "God bless the Duke of Argyle."—American Dairyman.

—The counterfeit butter business has become the biggest fraud of the age; 15,000,000 pounds of butterine were sold last year in New York. This is made from lard heated only to from 120 to 140 degrees, so that people who eat butterine practically eat raw pork. One valuable fact has been learned in the use of these fraudulent mixtures, that the American hog must have been free from disease or we should have had thousands of cases of that dread disease, trichinosis, among the consumers of raw lard butterine.—Boston Globe.

—Prof. Sheldon says: The period of milking may be classed in three parts. For the first six or seven weeks after calving the largest quality of milk per day is produced. After this the yield falls off pretty considerably, but then remains at the same figure for two or three months, when a steady decline sets in until the cow is perfectly dry. By careful feeding the best parts of the milking periods may be prolonged, and this ought to be the aim of all milk producers. If green fodder and other food, which stimulates milk secretion, can be used at the right time a considerable extra quality of milk may be produced.

Milk and Butter Tests.

A large number of tests have been made within a few years of the milk and butter capacity of cows. They have perhaps in most cases been carefully and truly reported. They have been accepted as correct by some, utterly disbelieved by others and accepted by the majority with a mental reservation that says: "We would believe you under any other circumstances, but this story is too extravagant." There has been without doubt a large number of remarkable records published in which the truth was strictly adhered to so far as the record is concerned, although if the whole truth was told it would modify the record greatly. This would be done by giving also the amount of food consumed, in which case it would frequently be shown that the relative expense of these large products was as great as that of smaller ones. The true test of value is the greatest product at the least cost.

These large records are becoming so common that there is a general distrust as to their accuracy, although the public dislike to doubt the honesty of those who make them. Now it does not follow that because there are a great number of large records that they become any less truthful, because the publication of one record incites tests of others, and in the present condition of our dairy cattle breeds there must be many phenomenal cows.

It would be better for the owner and more satisfactory to the public if these tests were made under the control of some capable and entirely disinterested person. Also, if the food and treatment were given they would be more instructive.

If these tests can be kept accurate, so that people can have confidence in them, they will do much good in stimulating production in the dairy. While some of these phenomenal animals may be overfed and injured, the great majority are vastly underfed for profit. Anything that will stimulate the average dairyman to better feeding will do a vast amount of good, and we look upon these tests as accomplishing much in this direction by stimulating an ambition to excel.—Detroit Post and Tribune.

THE new law regarding admission to the Iowa bar has been complained of as too severe. It requires two years' study in the office of a practicing attorney or in some reputable law school.

CINCINNATI, not yet over the horrors of the recent sanguinary riot, has been luxuriating in two circuses, a dramatic festival, a cat show, and a negro-baby convention. There is but one step from the tragic to the comic.

SINGEING, instead of cutting the hair, is said to seal up the ends and prevent graying. If it ever becomes popular, barber-shops must be better ventilated than now, or customers will prefer to do their waiting outside.

ELECTRIC lights have forced a reduction in the price of gas in Boston from $2 for city lights and $2 80 for private consumers, per thousand cubic feet, down to $1 30 for city lights and $1 80 for private consumers.

M. PASTEUR and his collaborators have announced to the French Academy of Sciences the fact that by inoculation they can render all dogs absolutely proof against the effects of rabies, in whatever way or quantity the virus may be administered.

THE late Charles Reade was once asked what he thought of the American newspaper system of interviewing. He declared himself strongly in its favor. "Just think," said he, "what a fine thing an interview with Shakespeare would have been!"

THE proprietors of a patent medicine offer to contribute $25,000 towards the pedestal for the Bartholdi Statue, New York, if permission is granted allowing the title of their specific to be placed for one year in a conspicuous place at the top of the pedestal.

A CLOCK made of hardened bread is on exhibition in Milan. It is the work of a Peruvian, who, being too poor to buy any material for the work, saved his bread, eating the crust and using the soft part, which he hardened in a mineral solution for his clock.

IT is expected that Pennsylvania will head the list of States in railroad building this year. Railroad men have of late withdrawn their attention from the new country, and are now engaged in covering with cross-ties and rails whatever unoccupied ground there may be remaining in the old States.

THE net exports of gold from New York in the current year foot up in round numbers $23,500,000. This is about fifty per cent. greater than the exports in the corresponding period of 1882, which were much in excess of the exports in any year since the resumption of specie payments.

NATURALISTS urge that bumble-bees' nests should be carefully preserved, the insect being the most valuable we have in the fertilization of fruits and other crops, their tongues being longer than those of honey bees, and therefore better adapted to securing pollen and depositing it on other blossoms.

GROCERS say they lose a great deal in fruit and other toothsome wares by the "nibbling of tasters;" but they must show their goods in a tempting way in order to sell them. Some of the more prudent grocers make nice displays, but secure most of their property under wire screens.

SAMUEL J. WALKER, the famous real-estate operator of Chicago in the years before the great panic, passed away recently, in his 58th year. He once held fifteen hundred acres of land inside the city limits, and was rated at $10,000,000 at the time of the fire. He obtained his discharge in bankruptcy a short time since.

MILTON ROBBINS, of Appleton, Me., is somewhat over eighty years of age and has always lived over the same cellar, which underlies his present residence, yet notwithstanding this fact he has lived in two States, two counties and two towns. This was due to changes, from time to time, in State, county and township lines.

CHARLES READE, for several years before his death, was engaged in preparing a mass of autobiographical matter, including some picturesque sketches of contemporaries, of whom he strongly expressed his personal opinion. This matter was left unarranged. Part of it will be published in the course of the year.

BICYCLING is rapidly growing in popularity in this country. It has for years been very popular in England and France, where the roads in all directions encourage riding. Hitherto in this country it has been looked upon as sport for very few people of peculiarly gymnastic qualities. That notion is giving way and the bicycle is being popularized as a means of exercise and transit.

Dr. R. H. Gale, Superintendent of the Anchorage Asylum is reported dangerously ill.

The Legislature has decided to adjourn, the members go home, raise a crop and return to Frankfort next winter and again try their hands at law making.

In Louisville is a man who publishes to the world that he is too busy attending to his own business to attend to that of anybody else. Congress ought to vote such a man a medal.

A Cincinnati grand jury has been instructed to investigate the riot. Of course those who called the Music Hall indignation meeting, and by their firey speeches, incited the mob, will not be looked after.

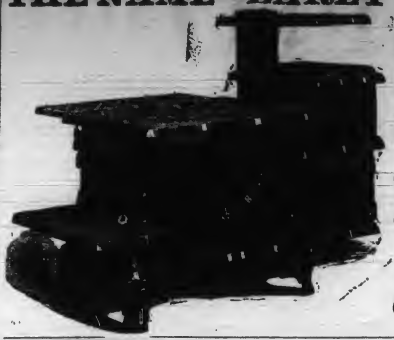
Blaine so far, has decidedly the advantage of the other aspirants for the Republican nomination for President. Probably they all wish that they had been engaged in writing a book for two or three years last past.

The monument erected by the State to the memory of Hon. John M. Elliott, the Judge of the Court of Appeals who was so foully murdered by Tom Buford, will be unveiled at the State Cemetery, in Frankfort to-morrow.

The Kentucky Legislature has been in session nearly four months, and the indications are that were it to remain in session that much longer it would continue to be overrun with local bills, and general legislation remain on a back seat.

Dr. Gale will walk the plank the first of next month, and Dr. Pusey, will succeed him as Superintendent of the Anchorage Asylum. Dr. Pusey, it is expected, will profit by the late investigation of that Asylum, and Dr. Gale's experience.

Mr. Beck's proposition that the best way to enable the people of all the States to educate their children is to reduce taxation, and leave in their pockets the money that now goes into the treasury in the shape of $100,000,000 surplus, is eminently practical and sensible.



About five years since a Judge was shot down in this State for delivering an opinion adversed to a litigant, and last week another was cowhided for the same cause. It now begins to look like the judges of the higher courts will have to be provided with a body guard.

John D. White proclaimed the other day that since he had been a member of Congress he had been the friend of the poor man, while Mr. Carlisle was the agent of the most powerful whisky lobby ever organized. Some of the members wanted his words taken down while others favored expelling him, but Mr. Carlisle, considering the source, requested that no attention be paid to them. White never suffers an opportunity to make a fool of himself, escape him.

In Kentucky the young idea is taught to shoot rather too early. The twelve-year-old son of the Attorney-General has just settled a personal difficulty with another young blade of blue-grass by emptying two loads of bird-shot from a gun into his opponent's head. When he grows up he will probably be more ambitious and refuse to go gunning for any smaller game than judges of the Supreme Court.—Boston Globe.

Cincinnati people have nobody but themselves says the Boston Globe, to blame for the bad names their city has acquired abroad. The manager of the dramatic festival says that he finds people abroad are actually afraid to come to Cincinnati for fear they will be shot. He says that no assurance of safety seems sufficient to remove their fear of danger. What are assurances of safety worth when one of the Cincinnati papers are doing their best to revive the riot by justifying the mob and pointing out that the murderers have not yet been hanged? Cincinnati has had her [illegible] and the piper must be paid.

It looks somewhat like Blaine will be nominated at Chicago by acclamation.

Indignation meetings can be held in Kentucky without resulting in a mob, as attested by the one held at Mt. Sterling the other night.

The Independent gives the following as the main feature of the Gallatin county stock law:

"All persons are compelled to keep their stock up. It is the duty of the officials to take in charge any stock running loose, and the owner is liable for each head of stock running at large, at the following rate per day: Horses and cattle, $1; hogs, 50 cents; sheep and goats, 25 cents. The law allows twenty-four hours from time of stock getting loose for owner to recover the same. All owners of stock doing damage, whether fences are up or not, are liable for damages done."

Corneilson, who cowhided Judge Richard Ried, of the Superior Court, in Mt. Sterling, last week, was hung in effigy in that city by Judge Reid's friends. Public opinion appears to be somewhat divided at Mt. Sterling in regard to the affair, while at other places the sympathy seems to be wholly on Reid's side. Judge Richards of the Supreme Court, has published a card in which he assumes the entire responsibility for the decision at which Corneilson took umbrage, and says that Reed was not in Frankfort when the case was being investigated by the court. The affair is to be deplored by the people of the State, as there are some communities that will take advantage of the affair to ascribe to the State a contempt for her judiciary.

The number of indictments returned by a grand jury is generally considered an index to the moral condition of the county, but we don't believe this always holds good, and especially is this the case in our county at present. The small number of indictments, the result of the grand jury's investigation last week, seem to indicate that the people of the county are at peace with their neighbors and the balance of mankind, and that the moral atmosphere is pure and healthy, which we believe to be a fact in a large majority of the communities in the county, but, if reports be true, there are some localities that would have presented a very bad showing before the grand jury had that body been able to secure the testimony sustaining the charges made. We hope that the reports that were flying about last week were exagerations, and that the charges they made are groundless.

The two Houses of the Legislature appointed a conference committee to decide upon a date for adjournment, which the committee fixed for the 3d of May to meet again on the 31st of December next. The committee agreed to the appointment of the following committees:

A Committee on Revenue Taxation and State Expenditures, consisting of two Senators and four Representatives. The Auditor shall be an ex-officio member thereof.

A Committee on Public Lands and Land office, to consist of one Senator and two Representatives.

A Committee on Penitentiary, Public Charities and Charitable Institutions, composed of two Senators and three Representatives.

A Committee on School Laws, to consist of two Senators and three Representatives.

A Committee on Railroads, to consist of two Senators and three Representatives.

A Committee on Railroads to consist of two Senators and three Representatives, which committee shall meet in the city of Frankfort not later than September 1, 1884, and may then adjourn to such time and place as they determine. The business of the General Assembly in the adjourned session shall be limited to the consideration of the subjects committed to the committees herein provided, except by a vote of two-thirds of the members of each House.

The Petersburg city council was before the grand jury last week, but the records of the court are silent as to the cause of its visit.

The Circuit Court granted two divorces last week, as follows: George Palmer from Maggie Palmer, Lucy M. Rouse from Robert O. Rouse.

Mr. Charles Gray and wife, Mrs. Ida Hall and Miss Kittie Herndon, of Covington, were the guests of W. E. Piper and family one day last week.

The protracted meeting that was held at Hughes Chapel, last week, by Rev. Geo. Frolt, of Petersburg, closed Sunday night, with eight accessions.

This term of court has been a great annoyance to J. S. Hume, of Mudlick, and he begins to take on the appearance of a patriarch—about the summit.

John F. Green, of Big Bone, finished planting his crop of corn, about thirty acres, last week. W. T. Smith will not be the county's early bird this season.

From the quantity of corn the Kansas people are sending to this end of the world for the benefit of the flood sufferers, they take them all to be corn crackers.

One of the petit juries last week could return verdicts as fast as they could be written. Jury No. 1, seemed to be a unit, but No. 2, was not so unanimous.

The attorneys and doctor witnesses should have secured a "point" before they commenced the Baily-Ryan trial. The plaintiff's shoulder was mentally dissected several times.

Next Saturday, at one o'clock p. m., the household furniture of Mrs. Sarah Cooper, widow of the late R. W. Cooper, will be sold at public sale, at the residence near Bullittsville.

Stott Brothers, of Petersburg, are having erected at that place, a building two stories high and 20x60 feet long. Which they intend to fill with dry-goods and groceries as soon as completed.

The Circuit Judge and the Commonwealth's attorney consider it the authorities duty at Anchorage to send for Omer Thomas upon being notified, as he was never discharged from the Asylum.

The damage suit of W. E. Anderson against J. S. Anderson and others, in which the plaintiff claims $5,000 damages for injuries received while working at defendants' saw-mill at Constance, was continued for the defendants.

Boone will send no representatives to the Frankfort pen at this term of her Circuit Court. The three who most certainly would have gone, took French leave a few days before court, and have not returned to take their free ride.

Col. Landram, of Warsaw, is one of the few lawyers, if not the only one in the State, who has in his library a complete set of the reports of the Court of Appeals, commencing in 1785, seven years before Kentucky was admitted into the union.

Some of our early farmers are about ready to commence planting corn. We now repeat the advice to test the seed corn before planting. In Kansas some of the farmers have made tests of corn they had selected for planting and find it will not sprout.

Floods come and go, but we continue to do business at our old stand in Lawrenceburg, Indiana, and those wanting tombstones or monuments will find our prices and designs most satisfactory. John Beall, of Hebron, is our agent in Boone county. Hurschart & Co., Lawreaceburg, Ind.

FOUND—On the pavement in front of Mr. Rouse's store Monday night, a nice white linen handkerchief, supposed to be a young gentleman's property, as there was a half-pound of chewing wax tide up in one corner of it. Owner can have same by calling at this office and paying for this notice.

Mrs. Thos. J. Stephens, who lives on top of the loftiest Gunpowder hills, had a chicken hatched out, a few days since, that had four well formed legs and feet. All the feet were perfect as to shape and number of toes, and one pair was arranged for walking backwards. At the last account it was getting along as well as its companions.

Lewis Conner Yager, jr., of Florence, was granted license last week to pratice law, and was sworn as a member of the Boone County bar, as was also Harvey Meyers, of Covington, and John T. Bashaw, County Attorney of Trimble county. Mr. Yager was given a rigid examination by Col. Landram and J. W. Calvert, and acquitted himself with great credit.

The damage suit of Henry Baily against Thomas and Lawrence Ryan for $5,000 damages for conspiring together and beating and wounding Bailly, occupied the attention of the court for two days last week; but when the jury got the case they disposed of it in thirty midutes, returning the following verdict: "We the jury find the defendants guilty and assess the damages at $500. J. S. Huey, foreman.

The following very neat invitation, which has been sent out to numerous friends, announces a very brilliant wedding to take place in Florence this evening. The invitation is as follows: Dr. and Mrs. J. A. Corey request the pleasure of your company at the marriage of their daughter, Lulah Blanche to Joseph A. Drexelius at the Baptist Church, Florence, Ky., Wednesday, April 23rd, 7:30 p. m., 1884.

Under the date of April 12th, Mr. G. W. Bradberry writes us from Washington, Mason county, Ky., as follows:

"Since I left old Boone I have traveled through Mason, Bracken and Harrison counties, where I noticed that the small grain is looking well. Much of last year's crop of tobacco in those counties remains unsold, and the farmers are preparing to plant large crops of tobacco again this season. George and I have rented a blacksmith's shop, said to be the best stand in the county, and expect to commence hammering iron next Monday. Tell the boys to come up and get their horses shod, and that we would be glad to entertain them as we are going to keep bach."

"Please send my paper to Washington, this county, as I can't do well without it."

Report of the Grand Jury.

To the Hon P. U. Major:

We the Grand Jury in and for the County of Boone, at the April term, 1884, report that we have endeavored to perform the duties assigned us faithfully and impartially; have inquired into and investigated all matters touching the violation of law and good morals, which has been reported to us, or obtained through witnesses summoned to appear before us; have been in session four days, have examined 48 witness, and found 16 indictments.

We have examined the public buildings and find the Circuit and County offices in fair condition, and kept in good order. As regards the jail, we are of the opinion that it is unsafe and unfit for the purpose intended, (recent developments having verified that fact) and that it is also deficient as regards the comfort of prisoners, and that no amount of attention of the keeper, within the limits of his duty can remedy this defect. But we are informed that the County Court at its last session of the Court of Claims took the matter in hand, appointed a committee to examine into and investigate the matter, with the view that they report some plan for repairs, or otherwise, that the demands of the case may be met.

All of which is respectfully submitted. CYRUS RIDDELL, Foreman.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Scattersville.

A little slow, all right.

Mr. O. P. Conner and wife, were visiting his father last week.

The farmers of this part of the country still go to Burlington.

What has become of that turnpike? Has the bottom fell out of it?

Watt has got another colt to train. He can knock down more fence than the next one.

The cold weather has made some of the farmers a little uneasy about their tobacco plants.

The farmers of this locality are about through plowing for corn, and are now laying on their oars, waiting for the warm weather to come.

Hebron.

The Hebron Sunday-school was organized last Sunday.

Lystra Aylor gave the young folks a nice party the other night.

Jacob Crigler has taken the contract of renovating the Hebron gardens.

Charlie Davis has purchased a fine filly which will throw dust in the other boys' eyes when the roads get good.

Two widows have recently married in this locality, and it is said another will soon follow their example. [How about old bachelors?—Eds.]

James Utz is about to make another effort to complete the Hebron pike. Now, fellow-citizens, if you want the road, stick to him when the funds are necessary.

Wheat looks well—A large crop of oats was sown—a large crop of potatoes were planted—stock hogs are selling for $5 50 and $6—Lambs are selling at $4—Corn brings 57 cents per bushel—Irish potatoes, 20 to 40 cents a bushel—Oats are bought at 45 cents a bushel.

Florence.

DIED—At his home near Florence, April 15th, Jacob I. Carpenter, in his 81st year. Deceased was the eldest son of the old Lutheran preacher, better known as Parson Carpenter, who was noted for his many virtues and manliness of character. He was a member of the Regular Baptist church at Dry Creek, Kenton county, was a quiet, good citizen, a father of a large family a majority of which have passed away. His life had been one of checkered scenes, passing through nearly all the vicissitudes to which we are subject. He had been engaged through life alternately as a merchant and farmer, and was one of the early merchants of Florence and as the custom was then, frequent trips were made to New York and Philadelphia to purchase goods. For a few years previous to his death he was unable to attend to any business, caused from old age and affliction. Thus he gradually passed away. The remains were conveyed to the Florence cemetery, followed by a multitude of friends, and lowered in the grave, the coffin bearing the simple inscription, "Rest in Peace." There was no funeral services upon the occasion, save a few words and short prayer by Elder Stephens.

Bellevue.

Our basket makers will begin peeling willows this week.

Miss Sallie Flandrau is home from her school in New Jersey, where she has been during the past winter.

Mr. L. W. Krautz and wife have gone to housekeeping in Mrs. Garnett's house where their many friends are calling upon them.

We learn that Uncle Jeff Akin agrees to furnish enough stone to build our landing, free of charge, to be hauled off his place near his residence.

Last week Will Grant had H. Griffith with a large corps of mechanics at work erecting a large coal shed on his premises, from which he will supply the demand of his extensive business.

As whitewashing season is now in order in our city, we would suggest to our good friends of the Baptist church, as they are disposed to leave that board fence stand around the church steepie, that they give it a coat of whitewash, the ladders might be laid upon the fence. We like to see things a little tidy about a church.

Commodore Jno. Bachelor & Co., are building a model cruiser in the Maceville shipyards, for the purpose, it is supposed of controlling the "Bellevue Driftwood Company," during floods. Those who have visited the shipyard, and have examined the model, for the swiftest running craft, are loud in their praise of the builders' remarkable mechanism. It is intimated by some that the builders anticipate a second flood of the Noah kind—hence the building of the great steamer.

Bullittsville.

Quite a cool spell.

The literary society is in a flourishing condition.

E. B. Stephens has quit farming and gone to training horses.

Mr. Tell Duley, of Indiana, was the guest of Miss Nettie Graves, several days last week.

The boys have commence playing base-ball again, and expect to organize a club this spring.

Guess the telephone has fell through, as we don't hear any more of it. What is the matter Bro. Davis.

Miss Mary and Allie Snyder, two of Petersburgs charming belles are visiting Miss Sallie Watts.

The Christian Sunday-school here is largely attended, and is prospering nicely, with J. A. Davis as superintendent.

Dr. J. C. Terrill is having erected a very larg barn on his fine stock farm, under the supervision of our enterprising contractor, W. J. Rice.

There will be quite an interesting lecture at the Christian church, at this place, Saturday evening, the 26th, inst., by Rev. Grimes, of Lexington.

Snyder & Clore have a large amount of very fine tobacco on hand, for which they fear they will not realize the price they anticipated when buying.

The next thing in order now is a picnic ground for the efficient dancers Prof. Piper expects to turn ont, to trip the light fantastic this summer.

We have nothing of what we said last week about our friend Orlando Snyder's marriage to retract, except that he was married at the residence of Rev. E. N. Dickens in Bellevue instead of Elder Stephen's in Kenton county. We missed the place of the actual happening only about 15 miles.

The trial of the Grant-Gaines slander suit commenced Monday. This is a suit brought against B. R. Gaines by James T. Grant for $5,000 damages, Grant claiming that Gaines at "Squire Loder's court in June last, spoke of and concerning him the words, "you swore a lie, and I can prove it." The defendant Gaines denies speaking the words. The following twelve men compose the jury trying the case: Solon Stephens, O. P. Winters, J. S. Huey, Samuel Pope, T. J. Stephens, Frank Smith, Charles Parsons, Joe Weaver, J. H. Lawell, J. J. Tanner, W. A. Black, and Hiram Rouse.

It now seems that the Gunpowder pike threatens to hang fire, and that an effort will be made to build a pike from Rabbit Hash to the n ighborhood where the Gunpowder pike would have terminated. The people down on Gunpowder are about determined to build a road to some place where they will find a market, and if the road does not lead to Burlington, and it is built at all, Rising Sun will reap the benefits of it. The road should come this way by all means.

We clip the following item from the Aurora, news to the Cincinnati News-Journal, of the 21st, inst;

Some enterprising town has posted up bills all over town advertising its advantages as a first-class manufacturing town, and setting forth inducements for people to come to it: but the bills contain no mention of the name of the town, nor is there any possible means of finding out by the bills what town is meant. It is thought, however, that Rabbit Hash, Ky., is the town.

WHY GIRLS WILL WED.

She rose at the early daybreak,
With a sick and aching head,
And she said—this cross little woman—
"I wonder why girls will wed!
They wouldn't, I'm sure, if they reckoned
The things that a wife must bear:
The ever-done work of a household,
The never-done Mother care.

"Six dozen pieces to wash to-day,
And the children must go to school,
And every one knows on washing days
Baby is cross as a rule:
And Bridget is new to the work yet,
(Oh dear, how my head does ache!)
Yet, I shall have the dinner to cook,
And all of the beds to make."

But as soon as breakfast was ready,
Father came in from the yard;
He kissed the sick little mother,
"Was sure that her work was hard."
He said to the noisy boys: "Be still!
Your mother's not well to-day;"
And when he bid her "good-by," he wished
He "could kiss the pain away."

And the coffee or kiss—which was it?—
Healed like a magical charm;
The spirit of diligent gladness
Was everywhere on the farm.
The father worked hard at the plowing,
The mother forgot her pain,
Bridget did well with her washing,
There wasn't a drop of rain.

The baking and cleaning were over
When the boys came home from school;
Baby forgot it was washing-day,
And pleasantly broke his rule:
And at night the house was clean and bright,
There was not a thing amiss.
"'Tis only a wife," the father thought,
"Would do as much for a kiss."

And the wife, sitting down in the fire-light,
The baby asleep at her side,
Her husband chatting, and watching her
With a husband's loving pride,
Thought much of her full and pleasant home,
Of her children asleep in bed;
And said, with a sweet, contented laugh:
"No wonder that girls will wed!"

ROBIN Y REE.

Hark! there it was again, that strange melody floating over the silent sea and moorland and falling on the ear as softly as thistledown. It was one of the old songs of the country, perhaps sung by some fisherman as he walked homeward through the Autumn twilight with his empty creel on his back and money in his pocket. The singer was invisible, but the words were these:

"Red top-knots and ribbons of green thou'lt wear,
If, sweet little Betsy, with me thou'lt pair,
Robin the King, Robin the King ridian."

The prevailing stillness made it difficult to say whether the words came from far or near. The breeze was too slight to stir the bracken, and the peat-smoke hung in motionless wreaths over the cottage chimneys in the glen, and the clouds of tiny butterflies that had flitted over the gorse and heather during the day-time had mysteriously vanished at sunset. The conies were awake, no doubt, but they prudently kept out of sight. The curlews were asleep among the turnips, the gray plover were away on the hillside, and down yonder among the cliffs the gulls and gannets and guillemots were standing in long white rows.

But if the solemn night was voiceless, it had a wonderful charm of its own, though the moon was yet to emerge like some gilded dragon-fly from its slumbers beneath the waters. The air was laden with the freshness of the sea and the perfume of the moorland flowers; the sky was a deep unrippled blue, to which the countless stars flickering in its dome imparted a vastness immeasurably greater than that of the sunlit day; immediately overhead lay Yn Raad Mooar Ree Ghorree, the Great Road by which King Orry brought his yellow-bearded Norsemen to the coast of Man; and at its northern extremity a pinkish glow was now advancing and now receding, afraid of invading the realm of night, yet unwilling to leave a scene of so much beauty. Away to the south, beyond a great sweep of tranquil water, broken only by the spear-points of the stars, a dense mist was winding around the bays and headlands, and as it drew aside for a moment there came from its midst the bright flash of a light-house; but elsewhere the atmosphere was so clear that the rocks stood out in bold relief, their shadows assuming all manner of fantastic shapes.

In the background the hills cut into the blue sky like a row of enormous shark's teeth, and after sweeping past fields of corn and clover, with many a cozy little homestead nestling among the trees, they at last arrived at this wild spot where gorse and heather and bracken tumbled into a deep glen, and then spread out on either hand into a sheet of gold and brown and purple, studded with an occasional boulder, as if to prevent the wind blowing it away. A couple of hundred yards further down the moorland terminated suddenly in a perpendicular wall of schist that dropped into the sea many hundred feet below, but parted in the center as if it had been cleft with a mighty hatchet. A few thatched, whitewashed cottages crouched upon the sides of the glen, for the wind sometimes blew such a shrill blast down that narrow channel that it was necessary to take advantage of the little shelter to be found there. In the ferny depths there was a glisten of silver, and a keen ear might have detected the babble of the brook as it hurried seaward.

Except for the invisible singer, the whole world seemed to be asleep, and the stars looked down upon an unbroken solitude. Presently the voice went on:

"Red top-knots and ribbons of black thou'lt wear;
I'll make thee Queen of the May, I swear,
Robin the king, Robin the king ridian."

The words had scarcely died away when two figures mounted the steep side of the glen and slowly made their way toward the cliffs. The one was a tall, handsome, well-dressed man with a brown beard; the other a woman, young and beautiful. He was the first to break the silence.

"Elsie, I've been thinking—thinking very seriously of asking you to marry me."

"Me marry you!" She had stopped suddenly to stare at him, her dark eyes brimful of astonishment, a warm flush on her brown cheeks, which were partly shaded by long, black hair, flowing around her shapely shoulders, and her hands clasped in front of her. Standing there in the midst of the heather, she looked like a startled fawn. "Me marry you, Mr. Graham!" she repeated, weighing out the words one by one as if to get at their meaning that way.

"You shouldn't say 'Me marry you!'" he said with a slight shiver. "You should say, 'I marry you.' And it would be nicer if you were to substitute Robin for Mr. Graham, which has an abominably formal sound between such great friends of quite two months' standing. Thus corrected the sentence runs, 'I marry you, Robin!' to which Robin replies, 'Why not?'"

It is doubtful whether she fully appreciated this singular mixture of teaching and wooing; indeed, it is doubtful whether she even understood it.

"'Tis only a poor fisher girl I am," she answered, "and 'tis you that are a grand gentleman, with money and lands and houses, so the neighbors tell me. Oh, but it would be a strange thing for me to marry you, Mr. Graham."

Woman-like, she glanced from his fine clothes to her own humble garb—a coarse gray dress of home-spun wool, a blue shawl crossed over her breast and fastened at her waist, and a kind of sun-bonnet. In this respect the disparity between them was sufficiently obvious, though it would have been hard to match the girl's graceful figure or beautiful face.

"I am not acting in haste to repent at leisure," said Robin Graham, with deliberation. "Some arguments may be used against our marriage, I admit; but as they all spring from an accident—the accident of birth—they can be easily brushed aside. And then, Elsie, the sacrifice won't be altogether on my side. Oh, no! you'll have something to give up, too. You see, I've thought the matter well over."

He paused and looked at her, as if he had asked her a question; but she was too astonished to speak; this wonderful thing that he wished her to marry him, quite stupefied her. So he went on:

"Fine ladies are all very well for a time, but a man gets tired of them—tired of their fine feathers, and their fine speeches, and their fine ways. That sort of thing is taking in the show-room, but inexpressibly wearisome in the house. There's not an ounce of sincerity in a ton of such stuff. No, there is nothing like a quiet, domestic life; a pleasant, humdrum husband, and a cheerful, chatty wife to make tea and sew on buttons, and do things generally. You could manage that, Elsie?"

"Oh, yes, Mr. Graham," she exclaimed, her dark eyes wide-open with surprise; "and I'm thinking old Kitty Corkill could do that for you." The words touched rather a discordant note, but the voice was singularly sweet, having learned its cadences from the winds and waves.

"Well, well; never mind about Kitty Corkill. She is old and ugly, and you are neither the one nor the other. Which is it to be, Elsie, yes or no?"

And now from across the heather came the last sad words of the song, but so softly that neither of these two heard it:

"Oh, sweet little Betsy, thou'rt breaking my heart,
Courting Robin the King they say thou art,
Robin the King, Robin the King ridian."

When the invisible singer ceased the dark hills seemed to grow darker and a gloom to fall over the undulating moorland and the wide sea beyond, though the sky still remained starry and cloudless. Elsie, perceiving that the "merry dancers" had vanished, could not repress a little shudder, but she was soon absorbed in the contemplation of the bright prospect suddenly opened out before her.

She was a beautiful picture of fairyland, for it was quite impossible to imagine its existence in real life. Wild hilly coast scenery is fruitful in marvels; but set a man down in the middle of a plain and he would suppose the earth to be flat, and life a monotonous level track along it. Here in this lonely glen, the whole air was full of mystery; the tales that the old folks told around their cottage fires after nightfall were of things and beings invisible to dull citizens. There was Ben Varrey, the mermaid, who, before every great festival, imparted to her jewels new brilliancy by setting them in the wave-tops, and there they might be seen flashing in the sunlight, while the syrens sang bewitching melodies to entice mortals away from them. Who had not heard of the splendid city, with its gilded towers and minarets, which that mighty magician, Fin MacCoul, had sunk beneath the waves off Port Soderic? Though he had transformed its inhabitants into blocks of granite, yet curiously enough they were summoned to church regularly every Sunday, for the sailors often heard the tinkling of the bell; and the whole island rose to the surface once every seven years, and would remain above water if only one could see it and lay a Bible upon it. And beneath Castle Rushen was there not a wonderful race of giants, who drank out of golden goblets and wore magnificent clothes, and whose suburban retreat was illuminated by a reckless profusion of wax candles? This was incontestable, for an adventuresome mortal had interviewed one of them, and the giant, after asking how things were going on in the upper regions, had crushed up a plowshare as easily as if it had been a filbert, and then said pleasantly: "There are still men in the Isle of Man." Why, Elsie had seen with her own eyes in Kirk Malew a chalice which had been carried off from an elfin banquet. And with such wonders she had to fashion her picture.

First of all, there was to be a house twice as large as her father's thatched cottage in the glen; the crockery on the dresser was to be replaced by silver plates, like those used for collecting in churches on grand occasions; the brass candlesticks upon the mantelpiece were to make way for gold ones; the stone floor would be hidden beneath a gorgeous carpet; the deal tables and chairs must go—something of wood, like the old Dutch clock, would look better; outside there should be a handsome porch and a garden, and geraniums in the window, and no split congers hanging against the walls; and in the midst of all this grandeur would be Elsie herself, dressed in silk and bedecked with jewels, like Ben Varrey, and do nothing all day long but sitting in an arm-chair and ordering her servants about. As this splendid vision passed through her brain her dark eyes flashed with delight, and half-unconsciously she swept the long black hair from her beautiful face to make herself look more like the Vicar's daughter, whose hair was fastened behind.

Herrings for dinner to-day; herrings yesterday; herrings to-morrow. There would be no more herrings, thought Elsie; the barrel would vanish from the corner of the room, and, instead, she would dine upon bacon and beef and delicacies of every kind. Good-bye to amylass (butter-milk and water), solisghan (a kind of porridge), braghtan (a sandwich of buttered oatcake, potatoes and herring), and binjean (curds); instead of these she would fare as if every day were a Sunday school feast, and she would have plenty of jough (beer) for her father and the neighbors. Oh, yes, her enjoyment was not to be wholly selfish. There was to be a chair for her father by the chimney-corner, and tobacco in plenty, and he was to sit there and smoke from morning till night; and her neighbors were to come in for some share of her comforts. For some, she would purchase their winter stock of herrings; for others, she would pay men to cut and stack their peat; and for others, whose nets had been carried away, she would buy new ones. You see, Elsie's notion of paradise was smiling idleness, tempered by a little well-directed kindness.

It would be interesting to learn how many have noticed a singular omission from her reflections. Among the fair sex probably not one. The idea of love for the man who had asked her to marry him had never entered Elsie's head. She regarded him as a convenient sort of fairy who could supply her with an illimitable number of good things; and this stirred her fancy rather than her avarice, as it would have done with better educated girls. Robin Graham was too high above her for her to think of loving him; she might have worshiped him, but love him—no, that was quite impossible. She felt that he belonged to some entirely different order of beings from herself; and, though he was well fitted to be the center ornament of the magnificent scene she had depicted, she could not bring herself to think of him as a flesh-and-blood husband.

But in all this golden amber it must be confessed that there was a very inappropriate fly, Joe Quilliam by name, and the question was not how did he get there, but how to get him out. He was a plain, simple-minded fisherman, a good deal older than Elsie, but without doubt desperately in love with her. There was no actual pledge between them. His natural bashfulness had prevented him from declaring himself, and he had not been goaded into doing so by the hateful presence of a rival; while she had had no need to question her own heart—a species of catechism that the dilatory fair sex seldom resorts to until the last moment. Probably she was, as she believed, heart-whole, for this curious organ is very like a "Rupert's drop"—hard and obdurate as iron until it is touched upon one particular spot, when it undergoes a sudden and irreparable transformation. In Elsie's case this catastrophe had not yet happened. She had listened attentively to all that the fisherman had to say, and she had occasionally chaffed him about his want of success with the lobsters or the congers; but this surely is not a very advanced stage of love-making, and, beyond accepting a few bright ribbons from him last Hollandtide Eve, she had given him no definite encouragement.

So far, all well and good. But, unfortunately, Joe Quilliam was rather a hot-tempered fellow, with a disagreeable plain way of speaking his mind, and there was no knowing what he might do or say when he heard that she was going to marry the fine gentleman, Robin Graham. It may appear strange that she should consider him in this matter at all, but she did; she even tried to devise some scheme for benefiting him. This unreasonable fellow would be angry, she knew; he would refuse to take anything at her hands; he might even refuse to speak to her. There really seemed no way of managing him. What was she to do?

By this time they had reached the end of the moorland. They had walked in silence through the heather and were now standing upon one of the great, black headlands that flanked the entrance to the glen, where the rivulet widened and ran smoothly over the glistening sand to meet the wavelets. Close beside them, and upon the very verge of the cliffs, a large bowlder was poised so that it seemed as if the slightest touch would hurl it into the water many hundred feet below. It had been deeply cut and furrowed by icebergs, but the ferns and lichens growing thickly upon it gave it a rounded appearance in the twilight, though there was a sharply defined shadow at its further side. The rocky ledges upon the face of the perpendicular cliff were white with seabirds, and a drowsy murmur came up from the caverns at its base. Away among the bracken in the glen there might occasionally be seen a gleam from some cottage window, but not often, for the lights are carefully guarded by the fisher folk along the coast, lest they should lure an unwary vessel to destruction. Not a moving thing was in sight; not even a ship upon that peaceful sea. The light-house had long disappeared in the gathering mist toward the south. But at such a time, when all is lifeless, inanimate objects have a strange way of becoming life-like; the winds acquire human speech, and the stars sight, and the very hills bend forward in an attitude of anxious watching and listening. In Elsie's case this feeling was so strong that she drew a little nearer to Robin for protection.

"Well, Elsie, will you marry me?" he asked, taking both her hands in his and looking straight into her eyes.

"—I don't know."

Surely the shadow on the further side of the bowlder started. And it might have been the wind, or it might have been fancy, but there certainly seemed to be sighed out in a low voice full of such mournful pathos:

"Oh sweet little Betsy, thou'rt breaking my heart;
Courting Robin the King, they say thou art."

Both were too engaged to notice this singular phenomenon; indeed, Robin Graham was rather staggered at Elsie's answer.

"You don't know!" he exclaimed, in an aggrieved tone. "Come, Elsie, what do you mean? You know I'm very fond of you, and I hoped you were fond enough of me to marry me; but, if you're not—well, I've made a mistake, that's all."

"Listen—oh listen, Mr. Graham," she cried in sudden terror.

"Merely a rabbit."

"Oh, but it's no rabbit. It's the boagane that's about, I'm sure. Let's away! Oh! do! let's make haste back, for its neither a bollan cross nor a dreain's feather that I have."

"You really must get rid of such notions," said Robin, who felt keenly that ignorance in a wife would be bad enough, but that superstition would be quite unbearable. "At your age, Elsie, you ought to know that boganes are gone extinct; civilization has drowned them, every one; in fact, they never existed anywhere but in the imaginations of silly old wom—— I mean, of those who didn't know any better. And how on earth could a miserable fishbone or a wren's feather protect you from harm? It's sheer nonsense. Oh, I'm not blaming you, but those who put such folly into your innocent head: they ought to be ashamed of themselves."

She was more astonished now than when he had asked her to marry him, and in her indignation she forgot all about the sound that had startled her. Drawing her hands away from him, she stepped back a little, and, with her dark eyes flashing and her head thrown back, she looked more like a beautiful Queen than a simple fisher girl. The feeling which bids us cherish what our fathers have cherished is akin to parental instinct; it was very strong in Elsie. What did this stranger mean by saying that there were no such things as boaganes, when their existence was known to persons of the meanest intelligence, even to Black Bailey, the idiot. The ignorance of the man was pitiful! Why, the Phynnoderee was a well-known character in Rushen, where he mowed hay-fields and corn-fields, and sometimes tossed bowlders about by way of a change, and the bowlders might be seen as proof positive of his existence. Was not the specter-hound seen nightly in Peel Castle? And was it not matter of notoriety that "Dame Eleanor Cobham, Gloucester's wife," haunted the same place? But there was no need to go beyond the glen itself; it was full of goblins. The waterbull, the glashtyn and the nightsteed had been seen by many old enough to believe their own eyes; and, as for the horrible groans of these noisy spirits, on a Winter's night it was not safe to go out of doors—at any rate, without protection of a chaplet of bollan-feailleoin. And yet this stranger had the impudence to say that it was all nonsense, that boaganes were a myth!

"Oh, but I've heard them, Mr. Graham," said Elsie.

"You heard the wind, Elsie."

"And I've seen them, too."

"You thought so, Elsie, but you were wrong. You could not see what does not exist."

"It's all very well for you as hasn't seen them to say they don't exist; but it's other people that have seen them, and they know that there are boaganes everywhere."

Here was an awkward stumbling-block. To marry a woman who believed in goblins did seem outrageous. Every night she might be putting out bowls of water for them to drink, and laying dust on the floor to observe their footsteps in the morning, and then brushing it carefully from the door towards the hearth lest a whole houseful of good luck should be swept away. There would be no doing anything for fear of offending these ridiculous spirits.

Robin Graham had decided upon attempting a very dangerous thing—nothing more or less than an experiment in matrimony. He really had become somewhat tired of the trammels and ways of the society in which his life had been spent, and he had grown so fond of Elsie that he had determined to marry and educate her. The same thing had been done before; why not again? About three months before this time he had come to the glen for the purpose of fishing, and he had taken and furnished a picturesque little cottage. He had been thrown much in Elsie's company; she had helped him with his boat and his lines, and she had shown him the best places to go for cod and whiting and mackerel. In this way their acquaintance had progressed rapidly until it had reached the present stage. He was sure that she was good and beautiful; what more could he want in a wife? Of course, it would be useless to think of raising her to his level; it would be equally useless to think of descending to hers; but surely somewhere between there must exist a platform on which they could meet on equal terms. Compromise is the very essence of a happy married life; Robin Graham had resolved to put this principle into practice without delay. He had studied the simple habits of the people about, and he was convinced that the thing was practicable, though perhaps not without some little friction at first. This evening, however, two or three trifles, such as Elsie's grammar, had jarred rather painfully upon his susceptibilities, but nothing so much as this revelation about her superstition. She had displayed, too, an unexpected amount of obstinacy; in the interest of her education this had to be eradicated at once.

"Elsie, your charms would be just as useful to you as a straw to a drowning man. Such notions are out of date; they belong to the days of witchcraft and nonsense. I assure you they would make you ridiculous in soci—among educated people. And as for these preposterous boaganes, you must give up believing in them—you really must. There never were such things, and I'll prove it to you."

Though he had adopted the foolish device of trying to strengthen his case by a mere assertion, Elsie was so strong in her convictions that she refrained from attacking him at his weak point. She said, simply:

"It's Joe Quilliam that has told me about them many a time. Oh, and I believe him, too."

"What can an ignorant fisherman know about such matters?"

"Or an ignorant fisher girl either, Mr. Graham?"

This harsh classification of his intended wife with an awkward common lout of a fisherman was exceedingly objectionable. Like many others, he considered himself vastly superior to every woman in his own rank of life, but he looked upon the women on a lower rung of the social ladder as much superior to the men. Somehow or other these two opinions had never been brought into juxtaposition in his own mind; if they had been, perhaps he might have been able to reconcile them, conflicting though they seem. The very idea that this beautiful girl belonged to the same class as that rough fellow, Joe Quilliam, was enough to make one shudder. Robin Graham hastened to repudiate it.

"Joe Quilliam is all very well in his way, no doubt," he said; "but—"

The shadow emerged from the far side of the bowlder, and took the shape of a tall, powerful-looking fisherman, in knee boots and a blue guernsey. He had a pleasant, open face, though its expression was half sad and half angry as he advanced toward the couple on the edge of the cliff.

"You here, Joe?" exclaimed Elsie, in evident alarm. Even this annoyed Robin.

"What does it matter?" he asked. "Listeners never hear any good of themselves, and Quilliam is no exception to the rule."

"Aw, I'm here plainly enough, an' you may say I came to listen if it suits you, Mr. Graham," said Quilliam; "but this I know, that it wasn't my own doin' at all, an' I thought it better to keep quiet than to be disturbin' Elsie by sneakin' off—anyway, until you began for to speak o' me, and then it was best to come out for sure."

Elsie gave him a timid little smile of thanks.

"That was very thoughtful of you, Joe," she murmured.

"And now I want to come to a plain un'erstan'in' with you, Elsie," Quilliam went on. "It's not for me to deny that I haven't heard what you've been sayin' between yourselves, for I have—an' its vexed me more than enough. Au' first of all let me have my say about the boaganes, which this learned gentleman here comin' from England where they know so much, though they live in towns for all that, says is all nonsense. Tut! any fool with eyes and ears in his head—and that's not much to ask him, I reckon—could talk of boaganes that he has heard—aye, an' seen, too, by the hundred. It's only this very night—an' it's solemn truth I'm tellin' you—as I sat watchin' for the Mary Jane, which is about due, I saw a great black thing rear itself out of the water just inside o' the tideway yonner, an' it looked aroun' an' gave a ter'ble moan, an' then sank again, an' I saw no more of it; an' on'y for my bollan cross here, I'd ha' run for the glen, for it was somethin' dreadful."

This horrible picture wrought upon Elsie's imagination to such an extent that she uttered a slight scream, whereupon the fisherman, hastily disengaging the fishbone that was tied round his neck, handed it to Elsie, who took it eagerly. He shot a triumphant glance at Robin, but Robin was unequal to the occasion—he could only laugh contemptuously. To put himself in opposition to this ignorant fellow, and run the risk of failure, was what he wished to avoid at all hazards; unfortunately, however, it was forced upon him in a very unpleasant way.

"May be, you'll remember last Hollantide Eve, Elsie," continued Quilliam. "Anyway those ribbons round your neck will help bring it to your mind. It was for a pledge that I gave them to you, though I am so stupid at talkin' that I hold my tongue foolishly. Surely, Elsie, you know I was madly fond of you, and your sweet face, and your pretty ways—surely, surely. Aw, but it's a poor, plain, awkward fellow that I am to think of such as you; an' likely enough if it hadn't been for the ould proverb, 'Black as the raven is, he'll find a mate,' which I kept repeatin' and repeatin' to myself continually, I would never have foun' the courage to look up to you, beautiful thing that you are. There's one here, though, that's not so backward at all; an' now the question is, which is it to be? for one or the other it must be, an' it's for you to decide this very night. Heaven help thee, my Elsie! an' Heaven help me, too, if you turn your back upon me this night; but if so be—well, I'll take ship in some ocean-goin' vessel, an' never trouble you more, so you needn't fear at all, but just give your answer straight."

And he stood like a soldier on parade, though the quivering about his mouth looked strangely pathetic in that brown, weather-worn face.

Here was a horrible catastrophe! It had been a lovely picture: Elsie with her pretty face and dark eyes and flowing black hair, with the still water glistening at the base of the bluff precipice whitened with seabirds, and the heather all around her, and the stars shining overhead, and the rivulet deep down in the ferny glen. And suddenly there had come into it a discordant element, the rudely-clad fellow with his awkward speech and ungainly ways, and all its beauty had vanished. Robin Graham was at once disgusted and indignant; disgusted at being brought into rivalry with a rough fisherman, indignant at this fisherman's impertinence in aspiring to Elsie's hand, and in placing him in such an undignified position. It is needless to say that this last consideration had the most weight with him. But how was he to extricate himself from this unpleasant dilemma? That he and Joe Quilliam should be matched against one another for Elsie's hand would be a lifelong disgrace, even should he prove successful; to be rejected in the presence of his humble rival would be simply intolerable; and to withdraw from this disagreeable contest would be construed into an acknowledgment of defeat. Clearly, he could neither advance nor retreat, nor even remain where he was without encountering disaster. It was difficult to discover the least of the evils presented for his selection.

Meanwhile, Elsie stood silent between the two men. Holding the bollan cross in her hand, she kept glancing from one to the other, and then down into the picturesque glen where she had spent her simple life among the bracken and the heather and the gorse. There were boaganes there, no doubt, for they loved the peat-smoke and the moorland flowers, and they revel in the babbling brook and the sparkling waves. There her father lived and there her grandfather had lived, and her ancestors for many centuries, and if their lives had been uneventful except for the perils of the sea, they had not been unhappy. Was she to break away from all these old traditions and become a great lady? or was she to continue in the peaceful groove that had been so pleasant to her fathers? Which of these two? Oh, that some fairy would help her in this distressing situation!

No sooner had she conceived this wish than there was a swift rush of something black through the air. It was immediately followed by the pitiful squeal of some creature in agony. They all turned, and saw on a hillock, a few yards distant, a young rabbit in the clutch of a hawk, which had swooped down upon the overventuresome little ball of wool before it could take refuge in its burrow. Robin Graham regarded the scene with curiosity. It was new to him, and he was wondering whether the hawk would proceed to devour its prey then and there, or whether it would carry it off bodily in its talons. But Elsie was deeply moved.

"Oh, do save the poor little thing!" she cried.

Pride kept Robin motionless; even now he was determined to hold aloof from any appearance of rivalry. But three rapid strides carried the fisherman to the spot. The great bird relinquished its prey and rose slowly in the air; while, apparently none the worse for its adventure, the rabbit scampered off and tumbled into its hole.

"Oie vie (Good night), Mr. Graham," said Elsie, in her stateliest manner. Her use of the Manx expression made her meaning sufficiently clear. Without another word she walked across to Joe Quilliam and put her hand in his and together they went away through the heather and vanished in the glen.

As for Robin Graham, the lesson was useful, though galling in the extreme. Sitting alone upon the cliff, he thought the matter over, and at length admitted that worse might have befallen him. But it was decidedly unpleasant to hear the voice of his successful rival ringing out merrily in the distance:

"Red top-knots and ribbons of black thou'lt wear;
I'll make thee Queen of the May, I swear,
Robin y Ree, Robin ye Ree ridian."

—One bright Sunday morning in the spring of 1680 Deacon Demet, of Leeds, England, flew into a passion at the sight of his wife's new hat, and in his wrath threw it into the fire. Only being able to buy a hat once in two years, she was in a terrible way. Being expert at plaiting straw for flower baskets, one day while rolling up a lot of it she bethought herself that she could easily fashion a steeple-crowned hat out of it, and she did, and it not only attracted favorable attention from the common people, but ladies of rank admired it so much that Dame Demet was soon overrun with orders for duplicates of it. That was the beginning of the age of straw hats.—N. Y. Times.

BROOKLYN, March 28th, 1884.

I have used ALLCOCK'S PLASTERS for some years for myself and family, and, as far as able, for the many sufferers who come to us for assistance, and have found them a genuine relief for most of the aches and pains which flesh is heir to. I have used ALLCOCK'S PLASTERS for all kinds of Lameness and Acute Pain, and, by frequent experiments, find that they can control many cases not noticed in your circulars.

THE testimony of many who long suffered from ill health, caused by an impure state of the blood, goes to prove that the best remedy for making the blood rich, red and pure, for beautifying the complexion, for curing sores, pimples and other skin diseases, for removing aches, pains, stiff joints, rheumatism, etc., for increasing the power of endurance, for giving health and strength to every weak portion of the body, is Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. Its effect pleases the user in every instance. No other remedy equals it.

The adoption by most of the prominent dairymen and farmers of the United States, of the Improved Butter Color made by Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt., is a proof of their wisdom in a business point of view. Nearly all winter butter is colored in order to make it marketable, and this color is the best, in regard to purity, strength, permanence and perfection of tint.

THE LIFE LESSON

LEARNED BY A PROMINENT HUDSON ODD FELLOW.

[From the Hudson (N. Y.) Register.]

Mr. John Elting, a faithful Odd Fellow (Past Grand) ("Lindenwald," No. 442) and a member of the Baptist Church, says: "I have been, as most of my acquaintances in Hudson know, a sufferer from dyspepsia for ten years. The symptoms of my malady were those which a million other sufferers in the land would recognise as their own. Beginning with indigestion, sour stomach and flatulence, I became so weak that my body became a burden too heavy to carry, and my mind was weighted down by a gloomy despondency. After eating I felt as if I had a ball of glowing iron in my stomach; my abdomen would bloat, and I was afflicted almost constantly with a sick headache. A lady learning of my condition advised me to use DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, telling me what an infinite deal of good it had done her and others whom she knew. I began taking it in the latter part of August, and used altogether only three bottles, when it achieved in me the most wonderful improvement. I have new gained flesh, and feel stronger, better and happier than I have in ten years. FAVORITE REMEDY cured my friend, R. F. Harmans, of Ghont, of the lingering remains of malarial fever and of biliousness. Mr. Harvey Thomas, the grocer on Warren street, just below the Worth House, says that it has had wonderfully good effects upon him. Scores of my acquaintances say that having once tried it they would never again be without it. I have given it to my children and found it the best medicine I have ever known for regulating their bowels and purifying their blood. The knowledge of this medicine I deem the greatest lesson of physical life."

PURITY OF GLUCOSE.

Report from the National Academy of Sciences.

An Experimenter Eats Five Ounces a Day for Two Months.

WASHINGTON, April 26.—A committee of the National Academy of Sciences has made a report to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue upon glucose. The members of the committee were Professors Geo. F. Barker, chairman; Wm. H. Brewer, Wolcot Gibbs, Charles F. Chandler and Ira Remsier. To the question, "Is the use of glucose or grape sugar injurious to health?" the committee say: "There was nothing whatever to indicate that the extracts contained anything injurious to health, and the conclusion seems to be fully justified that the samples examined by us, and which we have very reason to believe were fair average samples of the substances found in the market, contained nothing objectionable from a sanitary standpoint." In the experiments, the experimenter took into his system everything that could possibly be objectionable, contained in from 120 grams to 160 grams of the glucose or grape sugar, that is from a quarter to a third of a pound. It must be borne in mind, further, that the extract which was taken into the stomach must have contained any objectional mineral, as well as organic substances, present in the glucose employed. Hence, the results seem to be final as regards the injurious nature of glucose or grape sugar, made from maize. These experiments extended over a period of only about two months. On the question therefore, whether any injurious effect would follow the continuous use of this material, the committee has no information. It should be further remarked, that although our experiments show conclusively that the products of fermentation of glucose are not dangerous to health, it does not necessarily follow that beer made by the fermentation of glucose is just as good as that made in the usual way. That is a matter which does not fall within the scope of our investigation." In the summary, the committee says: "The elaborated experiments upon the fermentation of starch sugar would seem to be final on the question of healthfulness, of not only glucose itself, but also of the substances produced by the action of a ferment upon it. Large quantities of a concentrated extract from the fermentations, representing from one-third to one-half a pound of starch sugar, were taken internally by the experimenter, and that repeatedly, without the slightest observable effect. The result rigidly applied holds, of course, only for those sugars which, like this, are made from the starch of Indian corn or maize." The report concludes as follows: "The following facts appear as the result of the present investigation: First—That the manufacture of sugar from starch is a long-established industry, scientifically valuable and commercially important. Second—That the process which it employs at the present time are unobjectionable in their character, and leave the product uncontaminated. Third — That the starch sugar thus made and sent into commerce is of exceptional purity and uniformity of composition, and contains no injurious substances. Fourth—That though having at best only about two-thirds the sweetening power of cane sugar, yet starch sugar is in no way inferior to cane sugar in healthfulness, there being no evidence before the Commissioner that maize starch sugar, either in its normal condition or fermented, has any deleterious effect upon the system, even when taken in large quantities."

Strange Case of Insanity.

ERIE, PENN., April 26.—Geinsworth Pettis, a mill owner of Lockport Township, was brought to the County Asylum to-day, his insanity arising from over-mystification over materialization tricks practiced by an alleged spirit medium named Jones Pettis. He was a great skeptic, but finally surrendered his sense and reason to the bogus medium, and became convinced that he, too, possessed mediumistic power. Through Jones' jugglery Elisha, Moses and Abraham were materialized at the dupe's command, Jones personating all the characters, and even appearing as the Messiah. Believing the spirit of Nebuchadnezzar controlled him, Pettis went into the field to live with beasts, eat herbs, roots, etc. His keepers had great difficulty in bringing him. Dr. Lovell says Pettis is hopelessly insane.

Petty Tyranny.

LONDON, April 26.—Herr Kayser, a member of the Reichstag, who was expelled from Breslau under the provisions of the Socialistic law recently, has begged permission of the German Government to revisit his home in order to settle up some family affairs. The request was refused, and the Liberal journals of Berlin and elsewhere for the past few days have contained articles denouncing in indignant terms such an apparently uncalled for piece of tyranny.

Zebehr Pasha a Traitor.

LONDON, April 26.—A Cairo correspondent telegraphs the Times the following: "An English officer of great experience in Soudan, and a friend of General Gordon, assures me that he possesses abundant proof that Zebehr Pasha is intriguing in Soudan, and that he is responsible for the recent uprising north of Khartoum." The Times recommends an immediate inquiry into this matter. Advices from Abyssinia state that King John has agreed to Admiral Hewett's proposals to invade Soudan, relieve the Egyptian garrisons and assist them to withdraw through Abyssinia.

Prominent Manufacturer Dead.

LONDON, April 26.—Dr. Adolph Bruening, the largest manufacturer of drugs and chemicals in Germany, has just died at Frankfort.

Counterfeiter Arrested.

BOONVILLE, MO., April 26.—Marshal Smith, of Pilot Grove, twelve miles south of this city, arrested a counterfeiter giving the name of Arlington, and brought him to this city and lodged him in jail. On his person was a large amount of counterfeit gold coin.

Cattle Disease in Pennsylvania.

PITTSBURG, PENN., April 22.—Washington County farmers and stock-raisers are agitated over the appearance of a disease among their stock which is contagious, and the symptoms of which resemble pleuro-pneumonia. Two weeks ago several cows belonging to the herd of Robert C. Vance, one of the finest in the county, became sick. Common remedies were applied, but without effect. The disease spread until every head of stock owned by Mr. Vance was affected. The matter was then reported to the Stock-raisers' Association. At the instance of the President, Julius Lemoyne, one of Mr. Vance's cows was killed and dissected by Dr. Jennings, of this city. He reported that symptoms of pleuro-pneumonia were undoubtedly present. The result of the investigation was telegraphed to Governor Pattison to-day, with the recommendation that the district be quarantined until the taint has been removed.

Frank James Acquitted.

HUNTSVILLE, ALA., April 25.—The jury in the Frank James case, after being out three hours, returned a verdict of "not guilty." Cheers and applause from the crowded court-room greeted the verdict, the acquittal being universally endorsed. James was immediately re-arrested by the Sheriff of Cooper County, Mo., on a requisition granted by the Governor of Alabama, charged with the Otterville (Mo.) train robbery. One of James' counsel stated this arrest was made to protect James from the authorities of Stillwater, Minn., where an indictment is pending against James for robbing a bank and murdering the cashier. It is held that so long as he is held to answer the indictment in Missouri the authorities of that State will not allow him to be taken elsewhere. James and family leave to-night for Missouri.

Insane From Expulsion.

WARSAW, N. Y., April 26.—Rev. C. H. Harrison, of Belmont, Allegany County, delivered a sermon against the doctrine of immediate sanctification. The Methodist Episcopal Conference of that district expelled him from his charge and deposed him from the ministry. He at once became a raving maniac. To-day he was taken to the Buffalo Insane Asylum in a terribly excited condition. Although shackled and handcuffed, it required six men to keep him under proper restraint on the cars. He was a powerful man and of unusual mental soundness before the decision of the Conference was announced. Many friends have banded together to-day and commenced legal proceedings against the Conference, backed by a guaranteed subscription of $10,000.

The Greely Expedition.

NEW YORK, April 25.—The first vessel of the Greely Relief Expedition, the Bear, sailed on her mission yesterday amid the cheering of thousands gathered at the Brooklyn Navy Yard to see her off, while from the starting point down the East River to the center of the bay there was a continuous succession of noisy godspeeds from the many tug whistles and factory signals. The craft had been pushed out several yards from the bulkhead, and across the narrow gang plank running from the rail to the string piece was a continuous procession of friends who came to bid good-by to the officers and men, or who came with more substantial offerings of good will in the shape of packages of gifts and things calculated to make the weary monotony of an arctic trip more bearable.

A Forger Pardoned.

DETROIT, MICH., April 26.—Last year Francis A. Wordell, a Special Agent of the United States Pension Department, was found guilty of forging the name of Samuel Post to several promissory notes, which were discounted at the Second National Bank. Wordell had a great number of friends, and had been living in grand style on the money thus raised, and when he was arrested for forgery it caused a great sensation in town. On February 19th last he was sentenced to four years in the Detroit House of Correction, notwithstanding all that friends and money could do for him. To-day he was pardoned out by Governor Begole.

The Khedive Warned.

CAIRO, April 26.—The Khedive is receiving constant letters warning him that he is doomed to speedy death unless he abdicates. The number of guards at the palace has been increased. A reply was received to the request sent the British Government for an expedition to relieve the beleaguered troops at Berber, setting forth that it is impossible at present to send the relief demanded, as a sufficient force could not be dispatched before August. This answer has been forwarded to Hussein Pasha, who is also informed he may withdraw, if conditions are favorable to such a project. General Gordon's agent at Berber telegraphs that it is impossible to forward either letters or telegrams to Khartoum.

Cattle Killed by Drought.

ST. LOUIS, April 26.—There are advices from Western Texas to the effect that cattle are suffering, and large numbers are dying, for want of water and grass, the drought having been very severe in that section. Myriads of caterpillars have also appeared, and are destroying all kinds of vegetation.

Killed by a Fall.

CAIRO, ILL., April 25.—Mrs. Mary Geck, a German widow women, keeping a grocery at the corner of Fourteenth and Cedar streets, fell on the sidewalk, cutting a gash over the right eye. She went home, washed the wound and sat down in a chair, presently fell sick and sent for a doctor. When the girl returned the woman was dead. She was one of Cairo's oldest citizens.

The German Mission.

WASHINGTON, April 26.—It is learned on very good authority that the German mission is not to be filled for some time to come, and when it is Mr. Muckle, of the Philadelphia Ledger, is to be the appointee.

The Troubles in Cuba.

MADRID, April 25.—While Aguero's expedition was in course of preparation certain Spanish Republicans of extreme views sent an agent to America for the purpose of fomenting the movement. Their hope was that the movement could be made to assume such proportions that its reaction would be felt in Madrid. The Republicans promised Cuba self government, and declared that the relations between Spain and Cuba would be made similar to those between England and Canada.

CYCLONE IN OHIO,

From Whose Effects Six Persons are Reported Killed.

Beginning Near Dayton, it Does Great Destruction at Xenia, and Kills Five Persons at Jamestown.

DAYTON, O., April 27.—Shortly before five o'clock this afternoon the most destructive cyclone ever known in this part of the country passed over the southern part of Montgomery and Greene Counties, devastating everything in its course. It appears to have originated near Woodburn, a small town ten miles south of here, and eye witnesses describe it as appalling in its fury. An authentic statement is that the cyclone was formed by the union of two light storm-clouds from the south and northwest, which immediately assumed the form of a water-spout, rising and descending like the waves of the sea, and destroying everything in its way. It was fully one eighth of a mile wide, and moved about over the country like an immense cloud of smoke, while everywhere in its path the air was dark with trees and the ruins of houses. The forests were mowed down like weeds, fences were destroyed for miles, and it is estimated that in this county alone at least twenty residences are in ruins, to say nothing of the loss on other buildings, live stock, and farm property. At Alexandersville, several people are known to be injured, and one lady is reported killed, while sawmills, barns, and other buildings are destroyed. At Carrollton Friend's paper mill and other buildings are badly damaged, while a number of residences are reported destroyed. The telegraph lines are down in all directions, and the roads are impassable from the ruins that fill them. Near Woodburn the residences and other buildings belonging to Edward Wheatly were destroyed, with other property, amounting in all to $2,000. Two farm hands are reported missing. The brick school-house No. 9 is destroyed, and the roof carried 500 yards. Mr. Harris' house and barn are destroyed. One child was caught in the cyclone and carried 200 yards and dropped to the earth, only slightly injured. Mr. Mitchell's house and barn were partly ruined. Mr. Ridenour's property was badly damaged. Abner Harris' barn and other buildings are destroyed. The names of the other losers can not be ascertained, but, considering the large number of houses destroyed, there must be heavy loss of life. In the neighborhood of Miamisburg there is heavy damage. At Bellbrook, Greene County, at least fifteen farmhouses are more or less damaged, but the families generally escaped by taking refuge in the cellars. From Carrollton the cyclone took a direct easterly course, and its force was not in the least spent when it reached Jamestown, a thriving village of 600 inhabitants, which is reported entirely destroyed, with only a few buildings standing. The meager telegraph reports state that four people are known to be killed, while twenty are more or less injured. Among the others the residence of L. Wickersham was lifted from its foundation and carried quite a distance. Owing to the sparse settlement of the country and to the blockaded roads, accurate details can not be obtained, but with such loss of property that of life must be terrible. Near Xenia there was considerable destruction. The soldiers and sailors' orphans' home was badly damaged. The barn, laundry, and other buildings were destroyed, while the hospital and others were unroofed. Miss Harvey, the matron, and Night Watchman Richardson were injured, but no children were hurt. Between Jasper and Cedar Creek, on the narrow guage road, the damage is great to farm property, and at this point trains were unable to move on account of the wind, while others did not dare to pass over Cedar Creek trestle during the cyclone. In all directions south and east of here the scene of destructions defies description. Whole forests were cut down like weeds, and trees and smaller buildings were carried long distances in the air.

Buried Under a Falling Building.

PITTSBURG, PA., April 27.—To-night about 10 o'clock the interior wall of a two story building on Smithfield street, occupied by Mrs. Joseph Wagner as a cigar store and dwelling, fell in, completely burying under the bricks and dirt two children, Albert and Edward, aged respectively sixteen and six years. When extricated Edward was found to be fatally injured. His skull was fractured, and he was also internally hurt. Albert was badly bruised and cut about the head, but will recover. The building was the oldest in the city, and has long been in a tumble down condition.

Fighting Fire in Midlake.

CHICAGO, April 27.—At noon to-day the schooner Ottawa, of Grand Haven, Mich., lumber laden, bound from Grand Haven to Michigan City, Ind., was discovered to be on fire. The vessel was at once headed for this port, and soon had the good fortune to fall in with a tug, which took her in tow. It appeared at one time as if the vessel would be burned in midlake, but the crew fought the fire as well as they could, and arrived here this evening, when the fire was extinguished by the local fire department.

Terrible Railroad Accident in Spain.

MADRID, April 27.—By the breaking of a railroad bridge, near Cuidad Reat, a train of passenger cars was precipitated into the river. Twenty persons are reported killed, and twenty received severe injuries. One of the supports of the bridge was afterwards found cut, showing that the disaster was the result of malicious work.

Stricken Down in the Pulpit.

ERIE, PA., April 27.—The Rev. G. A. Carstenson, rector of St. Pauls, the leading Episcopal Church in this city, was struck down by a fainting fit while preaching today, and now lies in a critical condition. The cause is brain trouble from overwork. Dr. J. T. Franklin, of the same pulpit, less than two years ago had a similar attack from overwork, and died immediately. Great interest is felt. Mr. Carstenson was formerly of Meadville, Pa., and is very popular.

Skull Crushed With a Baseball Bat.

CONNELLSVILLE, PA., April 27.—Charles Dull, a miner, was found near the roadside near Bradford this evening unconscious, with his skull crushed. By his side was a baseball bat covered with blood. He was last seen with a party of about ten miners last night. All had been drinking. It is supposed that in a drunken quarrel he received the fatal wounds.

—Two young women in New Orleans earn forty-eight dollars a month by keeping books, and on this have bought and are paying for a cozy little home for themselves and their mother.

—In Canada, when a public official takes money from a contractor for favors received it is called "simony." In the States the synonym for "simony" is called "perquisite."

—Eatonton, Ga., has had the same postmaster for forty-nine years.

XLVIIIth CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—SENATE.—The Chair laid before the Senate a message from the President, transmitting the report of the Secretary of State, giving information concerning the average production, consumption, exportation and importation of wheat, rye, corn and cotton in foreign countries. Mr. Conger, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably and asked unanimous consent to put at once on passage the bill providing for Government control of Sault Sainte Marie Falls Canal, Michigan. Placed on the calender. Immediately on the disposal of the morning business, however, Mr. Conger called his bill up again and it passed. Petitions and memorials presented and referred: By Mr. Farley and Mr. Miller, of California—The joint resolutions of the Legislature of California recommending the passage of the pending bill providing for the establishment of a National Experimental Station in connection with the Agricultural Colleges. By Mr. Pendleton—Resolutions of the Legislature of Ohio recommending the passage of the pending bill relating to pensioning the ex-prisoners of the late war.

HOUSE.—Mr. Payson, from the committee on Public Lands, reported a bill to prevent unlawful occupancy of public lands. House calender. Mr. Randall, from the Committee on appropriations, reported back the Naval Appropriation Bill with the Senate Amendments, and moved non-concurrence in these amendments. Mr. Kasson thereupon raised the point of order that the amendment must first be considered in Committee of the Whole. The bill was an important one, affecting, as it did, the construction of new naval cruisers, and he did not think the House should pro forma express non-concurrence in the amendments. The Speaker sustained the point of order, and the bill with amendments, was referred to the Committee of the Whole. Mr. Randall said he would not move to go into Committee, as he had agreed not to interfere with the tariff bill at this time. On the point of order by Mr. Kasson, this bill and the amendments were also referred to the Committee of the Whole. Mr. Turner, of Georgia, Chairman of the Committee on Elections, called up the Kansas contested election case of Wood vs. Peters. The majority resolution declares in favor of the sitting member, Mr. Peters. The resolution of the minority provides for the seating of the contestant Wood.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—SENATE.—Petitions presented and referred: From the Governor, Executive Council and Secretary of State and other citizens of Maine, praying that Congress appropriate money in aid of the World's Exposition at New Orleans. From the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, representing the helpless condition of the harbor at that city, and urging the early completion of the Monadnock. Favorable reports were received from the committee. By Mr. Hoar, from the Committee on Library, the joint resolution providing that the two Houses will attend the ceremony of unveiling the statue of Chief Justice Marshall, Saturday, May 10, and appropriating $1,500 to defrayed the expenses of the occasion. To provide for the admission of Tacoma as a State of the Union. To provide for the deposit in the Treasury of receipts of the money order system and the payment of its expenses out of appropriations. From the Committee on Commerce, the House bill to constitute a Bureau of Navigation in the Treasury Department. This is to take the place of the Senate bill of like import, which, on motion of Mr. Frye, was indefinitely postponed. From the Committee on Pensions, to amend the pension laws relating to attorney's fees. The bills reported were placed on the calendar, and the joint resolution relating to the Marshall memorial passed.

HOUSE.—The Senate bill passed for the relief of F. G. Schwalka, of Oregon. The joint resolution passed authorizing the Secretary of War to lease to the Board of Fish Commissioners of Michigan a certain strip of land adjacent to the Sault Ste. Marie Canal. Reports submitted: To define and punish counterfeiting notes, bonds or other securities of Foreign Governments. Adversely to compel residents of one State to attend as witnesses in the courts of another State. An adverse report on the Women's Suffrage Constitutional Amendment. Mr. Reed presented the minority report. To authorize the erection of bridges across the Mississippi at Rock Island and the Falls of St. Anthony, and across the Missouri in Douglass County, Neb. Establishing Tacoma and Seattle, W. T., as ports of delivery. Authorizing the President to enforce the claim of J. E. Wheelock against the Venezuelan Government. Authorizing the President to appoint a commission to attend the International Prison Congress. To reorganize the Legislature of Utah Territory. The House went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Converse in the Chair, for consideration of the Senate amendments to the Naval Appropriation Bill.

WASHINGTON, April 25.—SENATE.—The Senate was notified of the House non-concurrence in its amendments to the postal and naval appropriation bills, and conference committees were appointed by both houses. Mr. Wilson addressed the Senate on the need of legislation to regulate inter-State commerce and to curb the power of the railroads. The pleuro-pneumonia bill was taken up, and Mr. Plumb said that on Monday he would ask the Senate to come to a vote on the bill. Adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE.—In the House, much time was consumed in consideration of the bill for the relief of Myra Clark Gaines, and finally it was laid aside with favorable recommendation. Both houses agreed to the conference report on the deficiency appropriation bill. An evening session was held for the consideration of pension bills.

WASHINGTON, April 26.—SENATE.—Senate not in session.

HOUSE.—The House was engaged in the consideration of a bill to remove certain burdens from the American Merchant Marine, and encourage the American foreign carrying trade. Several amendments were adopted, the discussion being animated. Several amendments were added and the bill passed. An amendment offered by Mr. Cox, and adopted, provided that it shall hereafter be lawful for any citizen of the United States to import iron and steel built steamships of not less than four thousands tons measurement, free of duty, and such ships shall be admitted to American registry, provided said ships shall be the exclusive property of a citizen or citizens of the United States, and provided further that such ships shall be excluded from the coastwise trade.

In a Pit of Fire.

SCRANTON, PA., April 27.—On Friday night, in a shaft being sunk by the Anitz Coal Company at Kyterville, the last shot fired by the workmen uncovered a "feeder," from which a large volume of gas began to issue. It was immediately set on fire, and the flames ascended one-fourth the distance of the shaft. Their existence was not discovered until a late hour last night. Wm. Higgins and his assistants, James Steel and John Riley, Charles and Wm. Jones, who intended to work all night, were lowered into a pit. When they came within fifty feet of the bottom they were terrified by the discovery that they had been lowered into a veritable pit of fire. They gave an alarm, but more than a minute elapsed before the workmen at the top of the shaft could ascertain why it was sounded. As soon as they realized the predicament of their fellow workmen they hoisted the bucket. The sinkers were fearfully burned, and it is probably they will die.

General Sherman Declines.

ST. LOUIS, April 27.—General Sherman to-night sent Governor Crittenden a formal declination of his appointment to a Brigadiership in the militia of the Eastern Division of Missouri.

—A newspaper correspondent writes that there is not a chimney anywhere in Mexico, as far as he has seen, and their absence gives an odd aspect to the architecture, like that of Arabian towns. No house has a fire-place or a stove, for it is never cold, but the kitchen is equipped with a sort of ungainly brick or stone range, ten or fifteen feet long, having holes for pots and kettles, and in which charcoal is burned. The fumes escape by the open doors and windows. Charcoal is almost the only fuel in Mexico, except in the Northern States.—Chicago Herald.

HIRAM PRAUT, engineer on a construction train, while shooting at a target, at Hazel Patch, a few days ago, accidentally shot Gus Gill, freight engineer. The pistol was a 38 caliber Smith & Wesson. THE joint committee of the Legislature, appointed to investigate the charges of mismanagement against Dr. R. C. Chenault, Superintendent of the Eastern Lunatic Asylum, have made a report that while he had failed to strictly follow the law in some minor matters, the charges were generally unsustained, and that his administration was entirely satisfactory.

IN the suit of Mark D. Hanover vs. Walter N. Haldeman, President of the Louisville Courier Journal Company, to recover $20,000 damages for alleged libel, a verdict of six cents for the plaintiff was rendered in New York, the other day.

GEORGE S. FORSEE, a pensioner of the War of 1812, died a few days since at his residence near Owenton, at the advanced age of ninety-eight years. Deceased was in good health until the last year, and never missed walking to town and voting the Democratic ticket at the regular annual election.

The Success of Humbugs.

People apparently like to be humbugged. Impostors succeed where men of real merit fail. In medicine, particularly, the quacks who surround themselves with mystery, or make a great show, or pretend to cure incurable diseases, are greatly sought after and implicitly believed in even by those who have intelligence enough to protect themselves against humbugs. A few weeks ago a woman appeared in this city and professed to be able to restore the sight of the blind, the hearing of deaf and to make the lame walk. She particularly boasted of her ability to pull teeth without giving pain. If she had hired an office and put out a sign she wouldn't have had a patient, probably, in a month. She was too well acquainted with human nature to pursue any such course. She showed herself on the street in an elegant chariot drawn by a splendid pair of horses, rigged out in gold-mounted harness. Footmen in gold-laced liveries and a brass band in foreign looking uniforms rode with her. Every day for weeks she was surrounded by a gaping, credulous crowd for several hours. She examined the afflicted and pulled teeth in her chariot. She devoted the best part of her time to selling a medicine which she recommended as a cure for about all ills. She was wonderfully successful in selling her medicine. It is said that she carried away from this city many thousands of dollars. It is probably safe to presume that the purchasers of the medicine never received any benefit from it. During her career here, however, it would have been impossible to have made those who stood around her chariot day after day believe that she was an imposter. The fact that she couldn't speak English and communicated with the people through an interpreter appeared to help her.

Not long ago all Paris was excited over a physician who bore a name suggestive of Arabia or Hindostan, and who took up his abode in a fashionable quarter and lived in oriental style. In a very little while after he made his appearance his house was thronged with patients. He charged enormous fees, which assisted in spreading his fame as well as filling his purse. The wealthy were his constant patrons. So great did his fame become that people from a long distance came to consult him. At last the suspicions of the authorities were aroused. It was concluded that he was a quack, and that he was simply robbing his patients. An officer was sent to inquire for his diploma. The official was courteously received and was politely shown a diploma from the University of Paris, and numerous certificates from hospitals where the Doctor had proven himself to be a very skillful surgeon and physician. The officer was satisfied, of course, that the Doctor was not a quack. As he was about taking his departure the Doctor said to him: "You will greatly oblige me by keeping a knowledge of these papers from the general public, for I should lose all my patients in a short time if they learned that I am a regular Paris physician." This man understood human nature. He had learned that people have a sort of belief in what is mysterious in medicine, and he made his knowledge profitable. The patent medicine people generally claim that the drugs in their concoctions are obtained from some far off country. On their bottles are pictures of half-naked savages digging for the health-giving roots or hunting for the strengthening herbs. Quacks and humbugs are successful in deceiving the people in proportion, as they surround themselves and their movements in mystery.—Savannah, (Ga.) News.

Terrible Result of a Practical Joke.

There are probably many of the oldest citizens of Live Oak who have never seen or even heard of John Gibbs, though he has lived, or rather existed, near the town for more than a quarter of a century. He has a history short, strange and sad.

Thirty years ago, accompanied by an intimate friend whose name we cannot exactly call to mind, but believe it was Boswell, he stopped in the outskirts of Macon, Ga., to pass the night. Being of a nervous and exceedingly scary disposition, Boswell, with some young men stopping at the same place, decided to have some fun at his expense. Accordingly, after Gibbs had retired and gotten to sleep, Boswell crept into his room and attempted to frighten him. And the attempt was a success. After hailing the unknown intruder three times, Gibbs became so frightened that he seized a knife and cut furiously in the darkness. Finally bursting out at a window he rushed into another room where some of the conspirators were laughing heartily at his discomfiture. But their merriment soon changed when they discovered that Boswell remained in the room and Gibbs was stained with blood. On returning to Gibb's bedroom they found Boswell dead; literally cut to pieces.

Notwithstanding the circumstances Gibbs was imprisoned and tried for murder. Judge Schley defended him and the jury rendered a verdict of "not guilty." But the shock was too great for the mental capacity of poor Gibbs. When he found that he had killed his friend his reason departed to return no more. To him life has ever since remained a dreary blank. His brother Shade takes care of him and he is quiet and harmless, unless by chance some one mentions the name of Boswell, when he immediately becomes raving. Thus has a practical joke destroyed one life and forever blighted another.—Tallahassee Land of Flowers.

—One Rawlins, a dealer in oysters at Thomastown Tips, Cal., got stuck on a few barrels of fresh ones, which he concluded to shuck and pickle. Noticing something bright in one of the shells he dug it out and was about to throw it away when he remembered having heard those things could be sold. He took it to a jeweler, who pronounced it one of the largest and finest pearls ever discovered and estimated its value at $100,000.

—A gay and festive party of fox-hunters, decorated with rosettes and sashes, rode through Norwich's Main street, yesterday morning, led by a bugler. The club went over into the town of Franklin, where one squad mistook an Alderney calf for a fox and bagged it in splendid shape.—Hartford Post.

—"How do you like the squash-pie, Alfred?" asked a young wife of her husband a few days after marriage. "Well, it is pretty good, but——" "But what? I suppose you started to say that it isn't as good as your mother makes." "Well, yes, I did intend to say that, but——" "Well, Alfred, your mother made that very pie, and sent it to me!"—Brooklyn Eagle.

—A couple of Westfield, (Mass.) men have invented a little perfume-charged knob, which they hope will become a popular appendage to ladies' fans and parasols. —The Rev. John C. Tennent, of Glyndon, Md., has invented a motor applied to tricycles which will tend to bring them into more general use, and make them still more a substitute for the horse and carriage. By it the difficulty of using it over hills and rough roads is obviated, and we expect to see it made available by our clergy, and especially by our missionaries.—The Churchman.

—The Philadelphia Academy of Sciences is building up a very fine herbarium, claiming to possess probably one-half the known species of plants. The growth has been very rapid for some years, the past year showing an addition of 2,868 species. Redfield, assisted by other botanists.—Philadelphia Times.

—Among the scientific results of Greenland expeditions it has been discovered that, contrary to the general belief, the west coast of Greenland is washed by cold water, while a greatly heated current coming from the south runs along the east coast at a short distance from the shore. GALLATIN county instructed her delegates to the State Convention to vote for Thos. L. Jones for delegate at large and L. C. Norman for delegate from this Congressional district.

THE old ticket, Tilden and Hendricks, appears to be gaining strength as the time for the Chicago convention approaches, and likely it will present a suprisingly large following when the convention does assemble.

OUR present Sheriff is being urged by many persons to be a candidate for re-election, which he will most probably do. He has made a most efficient officer, and the man who runs against him with the expectation of winning, will have to rise early every morning.

THE Committee, to which the County Court referred the jail, has undoubtedly a knotty problem to solve. To raise the present structure and replace it by a better one would entail a cost that the committee can hardly get its own consent to do, while they can discover no plans of remodeling the building so as to put it in the proper condition without a heavy out lay. The committee will proceed cautiously, and we believe that it will ultimately develop a plan that will be satisfactory to all concerned.

THE people down on Gunpowder are determined to have a pike built, and are working, and with much success, for a road leading to Rabbit Hash. Building that road is of no little significance, from the fact when it is completed as far as Joe Riddell's the people between that point and Union will take up the work and build the road to Union, which will make that town the center of a system of good roads and accessible to all the southern part of the county. Now, what will follow this result? A demand for the removal of the county seat to Union, where it will be bound to go, because the south end of the county will be solid in favor of the removal, and will receive much assistance from the Burlington and Florence districts. We have given you the programme that is now being discussed, and, which seems to be very practicable, and we are willing to wager our last summer's straw hat that if a pike from Rabbit Hash to Union is built, and especially on the route now contemplated, that this county will have a war over the removal of her county seat, and that Union will get it.

Old Uncle Frank Juniper, a colored man who lives three miles from Midway, ploughed up a copper box the other day which contained a number of silver coins. The old man's delight can be imagined when he broke open the strong box and found it full of silver dollars, halves and quarters. The box contained only about forty dollars in American and Spanish coins, the one of the most recent date bearing the stamp of 1807, showing that the money must have been buried about that year or the year following. This "hidden treasure" doubtless has a history if anybody could find it out.—Midway Clipper.

TENNESSEE LETTER.

NASHVILLE, TENN., April 26, 1884.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

Your interesting paper makes its regular visits to the "Rock City," and on Friday evening of each week, about 7 ex-Kentuckians make a raid on the mail boy, each one anxious to get the RECORDER and have first whack at the news from "Old Boone." The contestants can't always decide who has the best right. Then the paper is handed over to this Tennesseean, who reads aloud for the benefit of all concerned, until each paragraph is devoured and well masticated.

Owing to the severe weather, the past winter, the peach crop in this section has been cut short, the trees in many places failing to bloom; but a larger crop of apples and other fruits, is expected than has been for many years.

The season is from two to three weeks late, and while many of our farmers are not through planting, others have corn up and ready for the plow.

On the 30th inst. at 2 p. m., will be a sale of 49 thoroughbred horses, on the farm of Gen. Harding. "Belle Meade" has a national reputation as the home of the thoroughbred horse, and is justly entitled to it. Come down, Mr. Editor, if you can't find any thing to suit you in the Blue Grass, and buy you a colt.

Nashville is still on a boom, and our architects are of the opinion that there will be more new buildings erected this year than have been built in any former year of her history. And ere many years wing themselves into the misty past, we will number 100,000.

Since his return from Boone county, Kentucky, Mr. G. W. Brown is making the wheels of industry hum, and ere the "roses come again," the effect, financially, of the damage of the February flood, will have been obliterated.

Hope that the success of the senior editor, as a gardener, will be unsurpassed, and that thorns will not spring up and choke the "one dozen lettuce seed" recently planted; but that they will grow up, and increase and bring forth "some thirty, some sixty and some an hundred fold," so that he may be able to return a "good report" of his progress to the department at Washington the 4th of July.

Our genial and affable friend, Mr. J. B. Helm, who has been engaged in business in this city, since September last, will take his departure 2d of May, for his native Kentucky. May success continue to crown his labor. He is quite a gallant with the Rock City belles, and no doubt many will mourn his departure as those who have no hope. Their loss will be another's gain; though we are not sure that all of cupid's darts have been unfortunately hurled, and each missed the intended mark.

We were pained to learn of the death of Mrs. John Palmer, of Lawrenceburg, Ind. During our sojourn in Boone, in 1878, she was our estimable landlady. She was a noble, generous hearted, christian woman, an affectionate wife and devoted mother. Words of consolation fall mockingly on the ear of the bereaved husband and children, while their hearts are bleeding in anguish. We can only weep tear for tear, and point them to the "haven of rest," where she waits them in the beautiful beyond.

The Standard Bred Trotting Stallion MAMBRINO ABDALLAH,

Will make the coming season at Hogan Grove Farm, 3 miles north of Williamstown, Grant county, Ky., near the Dry Ridge Depot, C. S. R. R.

At $20 to Insure.

DESCRIPTION AND PEDIGREE.

Mambrino Abdallah is a bay stallion 15¾ hands, foaled 1878. Bred by L. Herr, proprietor Forrest Park Breeding Farm, Lexington, Ky., by Mambrino Patchen.

First dam, Lady Ayers, by Redmon's Abdallah Patchen. Second dam Lady Abdallah (dam of Granville, 2:26) by Alexander's Abdallah.

Mambrino Patchen (full brother to Lady Thorn, 2:18¼), by Mambrino Chief; dam by Gano, son of American Eclipse; second dam by son of Sir William, by Sir Archy.

Redmon's Abdallah Patchen, got by Alexander's Abdallah (sire of Goldsmith Maid 2:14), son of Rysdyk's Hambletonian; dam Lady Valentine, by Redmond's Valentine son of Imp. Valentine; 2d dam by Shakspeare; 3d dam by Potomac; 4th dam by Blackburn's Whip, son of Imp. Whip.

Alexander's Abdallah (sire of Goldsmith Maid, 2:14) got by Rysdyk's Hambletonian; dam Katie Darling by Bay Roman.

Mambrino Patchen, sire of Mambrino Abdallah leads all other living horses in number of grandchildren that have beaten 2:30, and the average speed is faster. Mambrino Patchen leads in number and speed having 8 sons and 7 daughters that have produced 16 trotters in 2:30 and under. Wilkes Boy 2 years old, record 2:30½, is also out of a Mambrino Patchen mare, and Ike Marvel record 2:30¼, is by a son of Mambrino Patchen.

Mambrino Abdallah's colts are nearly all bay. He is good in all points, great substance and stamina, and was the fastest natural trotter at even 12 months old I ever saw, and I priced him then at $5,000, and not a cent less would have bought him at that time. He is a sure and first-class breeder. I have sold a number of his colts at yearlings for $500 each. I sold a filly at 18 months old for $1,000, and a colt coming 3 years old for $1,200, and a four-year-old for $1,500. He is kindly disposed in or out of harness, and one of the most popular horses in the country to-day.

Lady Ayers (the dam of Mambrino Abdallah) is the dam of Tillie Thorn, who can trot better than 2:30. She is also the dam of Thorn Boy, a colt I sold a few days since at the age of 18 months for $1,200. Every colt Lady Ayers has ever produced I have sold for $500, and upwards.

Mambrino Abdallah breeds as fine colts as any horse living, and his colts show extra action, extra size, and always command good prices. Yours Truly, L. HERR.

The undersigned state that we know the horse Mambrino Abdallah, now in control of O. P. Hogan, jun., have examined his colts, and cheerfully recommend this horse as breeders as one of the best in Kentucky. W. W. Adams, Mammoth sale stable, Lexington; J. T. Nichols Com. dealer in live stock Lexington; Isaac Smith, Lessee of Fair grounds, Lexington Ky.; S. A. Coons, Former Prop. Georgetown stable; R. H. Willis, Sale stable, Cynthiana; D. S. WALTON, KY., April 21, 1883.

Dear Sir:—

In your last issue I see my name used as being a delegate to the Republican State Convention to be held at Louisville. You will please state in your next issue that I am and always have been a Democrat, and that there must be a mistake in the statement.

F. DEMOISEY.

[The above postal card explains itself.]

Dr. O. P. Hogan, jr. of Williamstown, was in town one day last week in the interest of his stock farm, and while here left an advertisement of his fine trotter, Mambrino Abdallah, which he has lately purchased of Dr. Herr, of Lexington, for $2,000, and is one of the best pedigreed horses in the State, and is being handled at a price within the reach of all. Boone county people who want to raise fine and valuable drivers are given this rare opportunity.

Since there has been so much stealing going on about Walton, John T. Conner has watched his store, and last Sunday night discovered it was being robbed. He secured the assistance of Esq. Curley and a Mr. Northcutt and undertook the capture of the thieves two of whom discovered their approach and escaped. When Mr. Conner entered the store he discovered a negro in the act of putting on a pair of pants he had selected from the stock, when he fired on him, and the negro whipped out a navy and returned the fire but missed his aim. Before the negro surrendered Mr. Conner gave him two flesh wounds, one in the leg and the other just below and to one side of the right eye. Having captured the robber they discovered he was the negro who escaped from jail at this place just before court, and who had been doing much thieving in Walton and vicinity. He was lodged in jail here Monday night, and Tuesday morning Uncle Sam put shackles on the gentleman, and he will probably stay a while.

THE MASS MEETING.

In pursuance of the call of the Chairman of the County Democratic Executive Committee, a convention was held in the Court-house in Burlington, last Saturday afternoon for the purpose of choosing nine delegates to represent this county in the State Convention, which meets in Frankfort, May 7, to select delegates to the National Democratic Convention to be held in June.

The meeting was called to order by Dr. Furnish, chairman of the County Committee, who stated the object of the meeting as set forth in the call therefor.

The Convention then commenced a permanent organization. J. Frank Grant nominated Dr. Furnish permanent chairman, and he was elected with a whoop. The doctor, in a few well chosen remarks, eloquently expressed, thanked the meeting for the honor bestowed upon him, made renewed vows of his allegiance to the Democratic party, and exhorted a unity of action on the part of the Democrats in all sections of the country.

W. L. Riddell was elected secretary, and the meeting being fully equipped with officers, commenced business.

F. Riddell, J. Frank Grant and E. H. Baker were appointed a committee to select and name nine persons to be appointed as delegates to the State Convention. The committee retired and in a few minutes returned the following list:

Burlington—B. K. Sleet, delegate, H. P. Stephens alternate.

Petersburg—N. S. Walton delegate, Chas. Schramm alternate.

Taylorport—J. C. Terrill delegate, John Stephens alternate.

Florence—S. S. Scott delegate, Benj. Stephens alternate.

Union—L. C. Norman delegate, W. H. Blanton alternate.

Verona—R. L. Finnell delegate, Thos. Carlisle alternate.

Walton—D. M. Bagby delegate, Reuben Conner alternate.

Beaver and Hamilton—J. W. Kennedy delegate, J. C. Hughes alternate.

Bellevue and Carlton—Albert Corbin delegate, B. H. Ryle alternate.

The report of the committee was adopted and the committee discharged.

The meeting adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved that the delegates from this county are instructed to cast their votes for L. C. Norman as the delegate from this Congressional district to the Democratic National Convention in Chicago.

On motion and second the delegates from this county are instructed to vote for Thos. L. Jones as a delegate at large from this State to the Democratic National Convention to be held in Chicago.

The meeting then adjourned sine die.

NOTES.

It was small and harmonious.

Furnish presides with dignity.

The minority voted as one man.

The meeting made no mistake as to delegates' party affiliation.

The delegates are all for the nominee of the Chicago Convention.

The strength of a party cannot be correctly estimated when the size of a mass meeting is taken as a basis.

Only three districts in the county represented in the meeting, viz.: Burlington Petersburg and Union.

The proceedings of the meeting was witnessed by one gentleman from Grant county, and one resident Republican.

It takes a bigger thing than a Presidential campaign to collect the Democratic host in Boone. It takes a canvass for some county office to bring out the legions.

Mr. E. Rouse, of Liberty, Mo., after an absence of 40 years, was visiting his relatives in this county last week. In 1839-40 he was a law student under Jas. M. Preston, at this place, but after qualifying himself for the law, he practiced but a short time, when he commenced merchandizing. While here we were shown a lock of "Old Hickory Jackson's" hair which he has, and on the paper in which it was enclosed is written the following:

"Hair of Gen. Andrew Jackson, taken from his head during his first term, by Miss Katharine Cochran in Lexington, Ky., and presented by her to Mrs. Murdock, and by Mrs. Murdock to me.

E. ROUSE."

The Grant-Gaines slander suit very unexpectedly and suddenly came to a close last Thursday without going to the jury after all the evidence had been heard and the instructions prepared for the jury. It was at that point the court allowed the plaintiff to file two amended petitions one of which was offered at last term of the court, and the defendant filed an affidavit for a continuance of the cause at plaintiff's cost which was done. All week the trial had been attended by a large crowd of the neighbors of the parties, and its sudden collapse created great surprise as well as indignation among them, but the court-house and jail were not destroyed. The continuance was a hardship on the attorneys who were terribly inflated with eloquence the like of which, no doubt, has seldom been heard in Boone's temple of Justice, and then there was a crowd of the fair sex of the town looking their very best, who had rendezvoued at a residence near at hand and only waiting the signal to wend their way to the court-room to grace the occasion with their presence, and their disappointment was great, and it was feared that when night fall came this crowd might reassemble, indignate a while and a riot and great destruction of property result, but the fear was not sufficient to warrant calling out the militia.

The Courier-Journal says: "A mob attempted to force an entrance into the Mt. Sterling jail early Thursday morning to secure a murderer from Menifee county named William Osborn. The Jailer confronted them with a double-barreled shot gun and the mob dispersed."

Florence.

The wedding fever has assumed a malignant type in our vicinity of late. As per notice the nuptials of Mr. Joseph A. Drexellius and Miss Luhli Blanche Corey, were solemnized at the Baptist church in this place, Wednesday evening, the 23d inst., Elder W. S. Keene officiating.

On the afternoon of the same day, Mr. John Fullilove and Miss Idora Swetnam came dashing through town, with a well developed case of the disease, in search of Edward Stephens. I suppose they were furnished with the antidote.

And still there's more to follow. The marriage of Miss Emma Rich, of Florence, to Mr. Fred Droge, of Toledo, O., and Miss Lizzie Hulle, of Kenton, to Mr. Thomas Dorsey, of Boone, was announced from the Catholic church, to take place some time in May. We can't expect to have settled weather till this excitement is over.

If it will not be out of order to mention cooking stoves next, I will say that Florence can boast of two cook stoves that have been in use continuously, one for 27 and the other 37 years, and both sound and all right. We will further warrant that the 27 year old has done more service than any stove in Boone or any other county for a shorter or longer time. If any one wants to file an answer to this let him or her apply to Gas Ometer, or if the foregoing married parties contemplate house keeping, I would advise them to inspect these veterans of the culinary department before purchasing.

TAKE THE RECORDER,

The Chambers Lightning Prot'r

We claim for the Chambers Protector that it is a complete and perfect protection against lightning; that it is the only protection constructed on a scientific basis, and that conforms to every recognized law governing electricity.

How does it protect?

By Induction and the power of points.

If is an insulated rod, having no ground connection, and, in the language of Prof. Jenkins, the intimate friend and co-laborer of Faraday, "If points are attached to an insulated conductor, and held near an electrified body, they become charged by induction with the opposite kind of electricity. This dies off in sparks or by a silent discharge, and leaves the insulated body. A prominence armed with points can no more be highly electrified than a leaky bucket can be filled with water; the electrified clouds are not attracted to the neighborhood."

The Chambers Protector prevents the development upon the object to be protected of the electricity of the opposite name from that in the cloud.

The Chambers Protector acts through induction; the Franklin, or ordinary rod through conduction.

It repels the stroke by the thoroughly known law of all electric action, that like forces repel each other. Being perfectly insulated, by a secondary pair of poles is developed upon the apparatus by inductive action. The positive induced pole on the rod repelling the positive primary pole on the cloud, and the negative induced pole on the rod repelling the negative primary pole on the earth. Thus a collision of the primary pair (the cloud and the earth) is prevented by the repellent action of the secondary induced pair.

The Chambers Protector prevents a lightning stroke; the ordinary rod tends to cause one, for, says Prof. Henry, "The fact is established by observation, experiment and theory, that the common style of rod does attract the lightning and receives the discharge not alone silently but explosively."

The Chambers Protector neutralizes and lessens the electric stress or tension by decomposition and dissipation; the ordinary rod increases that stress by concentrating the electric energy.

The greater the tension the more active becomes the current from the points of Chambers' Protector, as, according to Dr. Guillemin, the eminent European electrician, "In proportion as the electricity is developed, it escapes into the surrounding medium (the air) and disappears." The greater the tension, the more danger from the Franklin, or ordinary rod.

The Chambers Protector depends upon the cloud for its action, hence the greater the tension of the cloud the more powerful the protector is to repel lightning. From this fact it is confidently believed that it will protect from disaster in a cyclone.

The Chambers Protector dispels the accumulation of electricity by repulsion; the ordinary rod accumulates it by attraction. The ordinary rod is based upon Franklin's theory, that the air insulates the rod. Faraday proved that "the air is an active and essential agent in the process of induction, one-half of every molecule of the air becoming positively and the other half negatively charged, and hence carrying off the electricity opposite to that of the cloud" from the points of an insulated protector.

The Chambers Protector is in harmony with every known law of electricity; the ordinary rod is in harmony only with the exploded theories of the past. Not a single house of the thousands armed with the Chambers Protector has been damaged by lightning, while thousands of buildings furnished with the Franklin or ordinary rod are struck every year, property destroyed and human life endangered.

The Chambers Protector has thus been proved to be correct in theory and an absolute protection against damage to property and loss of life.

It is so because it is the practical supplement to the scientific discoveries of Jeakin, De La Rive, Maxwell, Faraday, Henry and all the other great electricians of the last half century.

All rods connected with the earth attract lightning upon the building. The so-called circuit rod has no electric circuit; because the poles are not united, unless the rod should run up into the cloud where the positive pole is.

A practical demonstration of this of protecting buildings from lightning is both interesting and instructive, and will completely convince anyone that it is founded on true principles and is strictly in accordance with nature's laws, and can be seen at W. E. Piper's store at any time.

We recommend this Protector to the candid consideration of all interested in a perfect protection against lightning.

THE PROPHECY.

Those who have looked upon the dead have seen
A faint prophetic glory in the face.
As if a light were breaking, warm, serene,
Upon their vision in some unknown place.

So now upon the ashen clouds there came
A delicate suffusion, deepening, slow,
Till through a silver rift a tender flame
Poured a pale radiance on the crusted snow.

And far o'er many a bleak and haggard mile
Of drifted glen and desolate white plain
The splendor hovered like a tranquil smile
On wan lips rigid with their last cold pain.

It was a revelation: the keen air
Seemed misted with a rain of luminous gold,
And in the hazel copse and hedge-rows bare
I looked to see the first green buds unfold.

And suddenly the mute midwinter gloom
Seemed musical with insect-murmuring,
And phantom odors of the cherry-bloom
Woke in my heart the ecstacy of spring.

The glory passed; again on field and hill
Relentless winter frowned in darkest mood,
And through the ice-bound valleys, rising shrill,
The wind wrung bitter moanings from the wood.

But I had caught the gracious prophecy
Of April hasting from her southern bowers,
And felt beneath the melancholy sky
The tender benediction of the flowers.

CRADLE-MIE.

I.

"Did you hear the news in the village?" said Peter Jansen to his wife, who was busy getting his supper ready, he being a laborer in the employment of a neighboring farmer, and having just returned, tired after his day's work; "did you hear, Netta, how very soon Clas Hermsen's widow has followed her husband?"

"What's that you say?" asked the woman, setting an earthenware dish of porridge on the table: "Is hump-backed Christina dead? Ah, well, those two haven't been separated long; Clas died in the spring, and Christina—it's just six months later. And that's a very bad thing for Cradle-Mie! what's to become of her? She hasn't got a brass farthing; she can sew and knit, but that's about all she can do, and I don't believe she can do that over well. Quiet, you bold children, you," she added, turning to her five olive branches, whose mouths were watering, as they eyed the steaming porridge; "mother can't do everything at once. Did I ever hear the like of that! Christina must have been in the fifties, and Cradle-Mie will have been eighteen years in the village next Midsummer's Day. Let's say grace, Peter, there's no keeping the children quiet, and one can't hear oneself speak with the noise they're making."

Jansen took his pipe out of his mouth and put his cap before his face; his wife gave their first-born a nudge, and frowned at him to shut his eyes.

They said grace. Peter prayed earnestly; and out of a very grateful heart; he was sure that his neighbor Willem, and Willem's wife and children, had not got such an abundant meal. He had ended his prayer, but when he caught sight, over the top of his cap, of his buxom wife, and of his rosy-cheeked children, he shut his eyes again and said, while he raised his heart in gratitude to the Giver of all good things: "I thank Thee, great and good God. Amen."

Frau Jansen had said her grace, too; but her thoughts had wandered somewhat while she was saying it. Hump-backed Christina was dead; and she could not help wondering when she would be buried, and whether any of her relations would come to the funeral; till it suddenly occurred to her that God might have called her away, too, and how miserably off Peter and the children would have been without her! A tear came into her left eye at the thought—she always cried first with the left eye—and she felt humbly grateful for having been spared, and prayed softly to her Father in Heaven: "I thank Thee, good and great God! Amen."

The children had rapidly got through their "All eyes wait upon Thee, O Lord!" and were looking, with longing eyes, from the dish of porridge to their parents, to see if they were not ready yet.

Their father put his cap on again, their mother gave the signal for the onslaught to begin, and before five minutes were over the dish was empty, and the porridge had disappeared down their respective throats.

Supper ended, the children were soon got to bed. Peter relit his pipe and raked together the charred remnants of wood on the hearth, so that the blaze began to flicker up merrily once more. Netta fed the youngest child, who was lying in an old basket-work cradle, and the little fellow made a prodigious uproar over the business.

"Gracious!" said Frau Jansen, looking down anxiously at her baby. "How young the child is!"

"How so, Netta?" asked Peter composedly.

"How so? Just think if you were out of work, or if you got ill, like our neighbor Willem, or if God called you or me away, what would become of the poor children. Albert, the eldest, is just nine, and the little one in the cradle is not eleven months old yet."

"Children are God's gifts, we must take them as they come," interrupted Peter; "and besides, they're getting bigger every day, and nearer doing for themselves. In a couple of years' time, Netta, you'll see——"

"Stuff!" cried his wife. "Small children, small burden; big children, big burden; and then you know the saying: 'When the litter's too large, the hogwash gets thin.'"

"Softly, Netta! We have never felt the pinch of hunger yet, or wanted anything needful, either. I'm in good health, and in good work; you're in good health, and as to the children, thank heaven, they're as happy and as healthy as the fishes in the sea."

"That's all very well, Peter; but if it came to happen us some day like the Hermsens?"

"Aye; if, if! God has helped us heretofore; why shouldn't he help us in the future? You said just now there were too many of the children, but if one fell sick, and God were going to take it to himself——"

"For mercy's sake, Peter, take care what you're saying!" his wife cried in terror, and she bent down hastily over the basket-work cradle, to give the little sleeper a kiss, as if she were afraid that the Great Reaper would assail him first of all. The little fellow, however, ill-pleased by this display of maternal affection, made a very cross face, and was just about to roar, if his mother had not hurriedly begun to rock the cradle, and sung him off to sleep again.

When the child was asleep once more, the good woman said penitently

"You mustn't take it ill of me, Peter; but I can't get the Hermsens out of my head; if we were to be taken like them, wouldn't the children be worse off than Cradle-Mie is now? Heaven be thanked that we are strong and well!"

The honest couple sat talking a while longer, but when the clock in the church-tower struck ten they were already snug in bed and sleeping peacefully on toward the coming day.

II.

Every one in the village knew that hump-backed Christina was dead, and every knew, also, that the so-called Cradle-Mie was alone now in the wide world; every one pitied the pretty young girl, who had no human being left to care for her, but no one thought of being the first to help her.

No one knew who Cradle-Mie really was; but the landlord of the "Horse-jockey" could tell how she had come by her singular name better, perhaps, than any one in the village.

It was natural that he should, for he and the Hermans had always been close friends; and he remembered, as well as if it had happened only yesterday, though it was seventeen years ago last midsummer's day, how Clas Hermsen had come running to him at six o'clock in the morning, just as he was feeding the calf in the barn. He remembered quite well Clas saying, breathlessly, "Listen here, Christian, I've got a strange thing to tell you;" and how perturbed Clas had looked, and how they had gone into the little kitchen behind the large taproom, and Clas had begun again, "Christian, you're a man whom one can depend on; just think that this morning——" But then Clas had looked at the door, as if he were afraid that some one were standing outside listening; and not till Christian had assured him that he might speak out safely, had he gone on. "I put my horse into the cart at three o'clock this morning to draw manure. I had got the cart full, and was driving it out to the field at Kuhkampe, when just as I got outside the village I saw—it looked odd, man, I can tell you, a little iron cradle covered with a green cloth, standing in the middle of the road, close by the old guide-post. I went up to it and lifted off the cloth, and there was a little child in it, with a face like an angel's, fast asleep. You can guess, Christian how I stared," Clas had proceeded, "when I saw the child lying there. It began to cry, and I didn't know what I was to do. At my wit's end, I put the cradle in the ditch and brought the load of manure out to Kuhkampe as fast as my horse could trot. When I got back the cradle was in the same spot. I took it up, with the child in it, and put it in the cart and drove it home. When I got home my wife was making up the butter, and when she saw the cradle and the child in it she set up such a screaming that I was afraid she would get cramps. I told her in plain terms what had happened, and that she ought to be ashamed of herself for having such an evil mind; and then we talked the matter over, Christian, and agreed that we ought to give the Mayor notice of my having found the child. I did so; and the Mayor, and Sprick, his Secretary, have been at our house, but they could find nothing in the cradle except the child, an armful of hay and a sealed letter, on the cover of which was written:

"This child is commended to the care of whoever may find her. God will reward him for his kindness to her. The child has been baptized; her Christian name is Marie. This cradle must remain in her possession, and this letter is not to be opened by her until she is of age."

The Mayor had readily given Clas permission to adopt the little waif and bring it up as his own, for his wife had had no children in the thirteen years they had been married, and she was not likely to have any now.

The landlord, who was looked upon as an unusually clear-headed fellow, remembered all this quite distinctly; he knew too that in the night previous to Clas Hermsen's finding the child, a carriage had stopped at his house. The coachman had roused him up out of his bed; he had drunk a glass of brandy, and had said that he was on his way to B——. Christian, however, had discovered afterward that the coachman had only said it in order to put him on a wrong scent, for the next morning the carriage had passed through Z—— in quite a different direction. No one had seen the carriage again after that.

The Hermsens brought up the deserted child with as much care and love as if she had been their own, and owing to the manner in which she had been found, she was always known in the village as "Cradle-Mie."

III.

A month had gone by since the evening on which we saw Peter Jansen and his family at their evening meal. It was still early in the morning, and as the sun does not make its appearance at the end of November till nearly eight o'clock, it would have been quite dark if the moon had not shed its wan light down upon the earth.

Peter Jansen jumped out of bed and opened the shutter.

"Hullo, snow!" were the first words he said. "Why, it has become winter all of a sudden during the night. Come, wife, get up," he continued, casting another glance back at the warm nook he had just left. "Get up, Netta; the snow's a foot deep or more; you'll have to sweep it away from the door as fast as you can."

The good woman did as her husband bade her, and when she had swept away most of the snow from before the door to one side, she hung a kettle of water over the fire, put a spoonful of ground coffee into a smaller kettle, and when the water was boiling fast and furiously she filled the smaller vessel to the brim, and stirred it round and round with a little stick to make the coffee, which was floating on the top, sink. She let it draw for a while by the hearth, and then, when Peter had sipped his first cup slowly and comfortably—"the stuff was vilely hot"—and had a second cup poured out, he rubbed his hands gleefully, and said it was right good.

"I had a very strange dream last night, Peter," began his wife, when she was able to sit down at last, "which I must tell you. I dreampt that a man came into the kitchen here, dressed in a shining white garment, just like the one the angel over the font in the church has on. In my fright I didn't notice whether he had wings, and I forgot if I offered him a chair, but I heard him say distinctly: 'Woman, you must die, and Peter must die too, so see your house in order.' When I heard that I felt as if I must sink into the earth, and I said 'For God's sake! who will take care of our poor children?' I began to cry in my dream, but the angel said with such a friendly smile 'Kind people will take care of your children when you are gone, but as ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye unto them.' Then I awoke Peter, and I began to think over the dream, and I remembered suddenly that everything hump-backed Christina left is to be sold to-day by that skinflint heir of hers, and I thought of the man in the white garment and of Cradle-Mie, and you see, Peter,——"

"And you thought we might take the poor girl to live with us?" interrupted Peter.

"Yes," replied his wife, "for, as I said to myself, that dream means two things; it assures us both of a long life, and it bids us care for that poor child as if she were our own."

So the kind-hearted people, who were pretty well provided with children already, agreed to add the foundling girl to their own five or six, firmly assured that it was God's will, and that He would reward them for it in His own good time.

Before Peter left the house they had also decided that he should buy the iron cradle at the auction with some little money his wife had contrived to lay by, "for the basket-work cradle was a rickety old thing, and it might be wanted again before long." Of course, honest Peter had no objection to the arrangement.

IV.

The snow was lying a foot and a half deep; it looked like a white shroud spread over dead nature. The trees which had been bare and leafless the day before had got a new and splendid covering during the night; there was a finger's depth of snow resting on even the smallest twigs. It was an unwonted and a most beautiful sight, but if one looked at it too long it made one's eyes ache. The village street had been partially cleared, but all the same it was hard work for the horses to drag the heavily-laden wagons along, and the miller, whom Peter met on his way to the auction, had two horses to his meal cart.

Frau Jansen had been right, all hump-backed Christina's belongings were to be sold that morning to the highest bidder by the auctioneer who had come from the neighboring town for the purpose.

Miserly Stoffel Holmes of K—— and his sister, long Greta, were the only heirs. No one, however, had the least doubt that if God had not called hump-backed Christina away so suddenly they would have got nothing; Cradle Mie would have had everything, and they would have gone without.

The whole of the furniture and the household utensils, which had belonged to the dead woman, had been collected and ticketed with numbers. The auctioneer and his clerk were seated in the kitchen, to take down the names of the purchasers and the prices fetched. The snow had been swept away in front of the house, and a sheet had been stretched like an awning above the windows on the right hand side of the door and a table and one of two forms had been placed under it. A few Jews and some farmers and farmers' wives, who had come there either from curiosity or as intending bidders, were sitting on the forms. [illegible] the crier, was standing on a bench close beside the window, through which the various articles were handed out to him, and he was endeavoring by sundry stale jokes to palm the old lumber off on the people.

These, however, evinced little inclination to buy. They laughed at the crier's witticisms and personalties, but bid they would not. Most of the things were bought by Samuel, the second-hand dealer, by the shape of whose nose one could tell a hundred paces off that he was of the seed of Abraham.

"There's nothing of yours here," roared Stoffel Holmes' harsh voice suddenly. "Yes. I like that! to want to take the cradle away with you, you grab-all of a girl! Didn't you live on Aunt Christina? and weren't you a burden to her long enough?" At the same instant Peter, who had been standing at a distance with his hands in his pockets, looking on at the sale, saw the greedy heir take Cradle-Mie, the favorite of the whole village, by the arm and fling her out of the house in which she had been a welcome inmate for nearly eighteen years.

There was an angry shout from the little crowd of bidders, and it was well for Stoffel Holmes that he was back in the house at once, or the crowd of bystanders, of whom Peter Jansen would not have been the last, might have compelled him to hear some unpleasant things, and possibly to feel them, too.

There stood poor Marie, alone in the wide world; and it was so cold, and her beloved fostermother's heir had been so cruel to her, that the gentle, sensitive girl began to cry bitterly at the threshold of the dwelling where she had often played in her happy childhood.

"A superb article!" shouted the crier, as the old iron cradle was handed out to him through the window. "A real rarity, and of most distinguished origin! I say, Samuel, won't you buy it and give it to your Sarah at Christmas?"

A roar of laughter greeted this witticism.

"But the Jews don't believe in Christmas," observed farmer Laarmann, sagely.

"Indeed, Herr Laarmann," replied the Jew. "Just try it. Give me something at Christmas that's worth taking, and you'll see if I don't believe in it and keep it."

"Now then, Samuel, bid a gulden," urged the crier.

"Not I, Lippes," returned the old Jew. "You'd better buy it yourself for your bride."

Now the Jew had the laugh on his side.

"An iron cradle, who'll bid for it?" roared Lippes, above the laughter.

"Three stivers?" was heard from the interior of the house.

"A quarter gulden!" said Peter Jansen.

"Two!" cried the Jew Samuel.

"Three!" from the house.

"A gulden!" cried Peter hotly.

"And a quarter," enhanced the Jew.

"And another!" from the house.

"There should be three of all good things!" cried Peter and nodded to the crier.

"A gulden and three-quarters!" shouted he. "No one bid more than a gulden and three-quarters? Once—no one bid?—twice—thrice!"

The word was said, and the crier handed the cradle over to Peter with some suitable remarks.

While the women were making a minute inspection of the cradle to see if it was worth the money which had been given for it, Peter went up to the girl, who was still standing at the door crying. It certainly was very hard that Cradle-Mie should have to look on and see the cradle, which was indisputably her property, and the only memorial of her unknown parents which she possessed, being brought to the hammer by miserly Stoffel Holmes, to say nothing of his having spoken to her so roughly, and turned her out of the house. Every one was very sorry for the gentle girl and very irate against Stoffel Holmes, but—Peter Jansen was the first and only one who took her kindly by the hand, offered her the shelter of his roof and comforted her with plain, homely words.

It was getting very near Candlemas, and Peter Jansen's half dozen was soon to be completed. Cradle-Mie had been nearly two months in the house, Frau Jansen's trusty helpmate and the idol of the children, who clung about the tall, handsome girl like creepers.

Peter came in—he had been to the town—and threw a small parcel on the table.

"There wife," said he, "there's the new covering for the cradle; if Mie will stitch it on, you can have it done in a hand's turn."

"That's right!" said Frau Jansen, opening the parcel, "and it's good stuff, too," she added, feeling it; "what did you give a yard for it?"

"The Jew had the face to ask a half gulden, but I gave him a quarter, and he was glad to get it."

"Yes, there's nothing they won't ask," said Frau Jansen, "but you didn't let yourself be cheated; we'll send you again when we want anything. Now, Mie, fetch down the old cradle from the attic, we'll tear the old covering off, and sew this on instead."

Cradle-Mie ran up to the attic as fast as she could, to fetch down her earliest dwelling; she came back with the cradle in a few minutes, and set to work at once.

"The lining underneath is sewed on firmly," said the girl, when she had been trying to rip it off for half an hour or more. "There seems to be paper or something in between, just look, Peter!"

"What?" said Peter who was changing his laced boots for wooden shoes. Is there a paper under the lining? Let me see—I do believe you're right, there is something under it. Rip it off as quick as you can, but take care you don't cut anything. It is a piece of paper, look, wife and how thin and oddly printed it is! Get me my glasses, Netta! Here's another paper like it, and another! Good Heavens! they look just like the bank notes I saw at the tax-gatherer's the other day. Here, Marie, read what's written on them, you've got young eyes!" And when Cradle-Mie told him that they were three notes of the Bank of the Netherlands, each worth a thousand guldens, Peter was petrified with amazement and stared at the girl speechless and open-mouthed.

This unlooked for discovery created no little excitement in the minds of the worthy people.

Marie had not told the Jansens when they took her into their house so kindly that on the outside of the sealed letter, which she had kept faithfully all this time, the iron cradle was assigned to her as her inalienable property; for if she had possessed a hundred times the value of the cradle she would have given it gladly for a home with respectable people.

The handsome sum of 3,000 guldens, which had been sewed into the lining of the cradle cover, caused honest Peter Jansen no little perplexity.

"I bought the cradle at the auction," he said to himself, when he had somewhat recovered from his astonishment, "and I paid for it, too. The cradle is mine, and all that was in it when I bought it. But, if I mean to be an honest man, I ought——"

Greed, however, against which the minister had preached so often, that Peter had given up listening to him at last—what had a poor man like him to say to greed?—greed began to stir mightily within him, urging him to keep the money for himself.

Before Peter had got a word out, however, his wife threw up her hands in wonderment and cried:

"Well, Mie, you're finely off now! Girl, what's to be the end of all this? If you don't get too proud to stay with us, that's all I hope! Three thousand guldens—why that's a real fortune!"

And the good woman took up the three bank notes, which had made their appearance so unexpectedly, and examined them again one by one very carefully.

After talking the matter over, they decided to open the sealed letter which Cradle-Mie had brought down. There was nothing in it, however, except that the girl was to search the lining of the green cradle cover, and that she would find 3,000 guldens in it, which would provide her with a suitable dowry, on her becoming the wife of some respectable farmer—Marie crimsoned up to the ears at this—and also enable her to make some return to her foster parents for their kindness to her.

Great tears came into Marie's eyes at these his last words; she was thinking of good Clas Hermsen and hump-backed Christina, to neither of whom could she make any return for all that they had done for her.

Peter had soon got the mastery over the tempter, and would have nothing to say to the money. Marie, however, insisted that he had bought the bank notes along with the cradle, and would have nothing to say to them, either.

"Are you silly, girl?" exclaimed Frau Jansen, in her resolute way. "Whoever heard of buying three thousand guldens for a gulden and three-quarters?" and so saying she pushed the bank notes over to the girl.

"I should like to see myself taking them," said Marie, and put two of them down before Peter, but Frau Jansen took one and gave it back to the girl.

So the matter was finally settled.

Cradle-Mie stayed on with the Jansens. Peter put her 2,000 guldens into the savings bank till the young farmer, who had been alluded to, should turn up. "And we won't have long to wait for him," he opined, chuckling. With the third bank note he bought himself a bit of land, a horse and two cows. When anyone asked him how he had grown so rich all of a sudden, he replied that God had blessed him "a thousand-fold;" and it seemed to him for no other reason than that he had taken pity on the poor, destitute girl.

Three days after Candlemas Frau Jansen had a fine little girl, to whom Cradle-Mie stood godmother, and the little one did so well in the newly-covered iron cradle that it was a pleasure to look at her.

"The respectable young farmer," too, did not fail to appear; for, when Frau Jansen's brother came home in the following year from serving in the army, Cradle-Mie found great favor in his eyes and he in Cradle-Mie's, and they were married before the year was out. The young couple took the old iron cradle to their new home.

Peter is still as ignorant of Cradle-Mie's parentage as the rest of the inhabitants of the village. Christian, the landlord of the "Horse Jockey," sounded him on the matter the other day, but all the answer Peter made was: 'If I could only find that out, my good fellow, I'd put a whole gulden into the almsbag next Sunday morning with joy."—*N. —Dr. Gross is quoted in the Philadelphia Chronicle-Record as saying that if the brain is penetrated by a ball, the rule to let it alone is an exceedingly bad one; investigation has shown that the brain can be handled to a considerable extent with impunity, and there is a great future for operations within the cranial cavity.

A Prudent Woman.

"Do you keep arsenic for rats?" she asked in a Woodward avenue drug store yesterday.

"Yes'm."

"I'll take a dime's worth."

When it was weighed out and paid for she stood for a moment in deep thought and then said:

"Lots of people mistake arsenic for baking-powder and put it in the biscuit."

"Yes'm."

"Well, I don't want to commit any such foolishness. Here is a half-pound can of baking-powder. You can empty it out and do it up in paper and put the arsenic in the box. When I see the words 'baking powder' on the box I can remember that it's arsenic, and if you'll write 'poison' on the baking-powder I won't forget that it's all right for my biscuit. Nothing like being a leetle keerful about handling dangerous things."—Detroit Free Press.

New Position in Politics.

"Do you see that man over by the post-office corner lounging so carelessly?" asked Jones of a friend the other day as he was exhibiting the sights of the dingy metropolis.

"Oh, yes; I see him, of course," replied his companion. "I don't see anything remarkable about him."

"Why, he's a politician, you know; runs the machine; in all the big jobs; makes I don't know how much money, and just how! Why look at him! Do you notice nothing remarkable?"

"Can't say I do."

"Why, he's got his hands in his own pockets!"—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

—In boring for water near Snake River, about forty-five miles from Dayton, Oregon, recently, a stratum of frozen earth was encountered at a depth of fifty-five feet. Passing through this for five feet, numerous cavities were found from which cold air came in gusts. The escaping air at the bottom of the well can be heard roaring at some distance. It is not possible for any one to hold his hand over the well for any length of time without freezing it, and a bucket of water let down into the well was frozen over in a few minutes. —Near the little village called Enon, ten miles south-east of Fort Worth, lives Mr. P. J. Manning, whose wife gave birth to twins a short time ago. Dr. Chambers says that the eldest when born, weighed about one and a quarter pounds, and the other about five and a half pounds, a plump child. The smaller of the two could have been placed in a glass tumbler with ease. Its legs are not as large as a man's index finger, and its length would not exceed that of the entire hand. The doctor reports the little fellow thriving.—Fort Worth (Tex.) Gazette.

—Speaking at Edinburgh upon thunder-storm phenomena, Prof. P. G. Tait remarked that lightning is 100,000 times as brilliant as it appears to us, since the eye requires one-tenth of a second to receive the full light of the flash, while the flash itself lasts only about one-millionth of a second. As we see the landscape under the light of a spark from the clouds it is 1000 times less bright than when illuminated by the sun; but if the lightning lasted one-tenth of a second, so that we could realize its full intensity, it would blind us with the brilliancy of 100 suns.

PNEUMONIA PREVENTED.

OYSTER BAY, N.Y., April 11, 1883.

I believe I have been saved from a terrible illness by ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS.

About a month ago I was attacked with a violent pain in my chest, accompanied by a fever and great difficulty in breathing. I apprehended pneumonia, which is so prevalent at present; I went to bed and applied one Allcock's Plaster between my shoulder blades and two on my chest. In an hour my breathing was much easier, in two hours the pain had left me, and the next morning I awoke perfectly free from fever. I went about my business as usual, and at the end of a week took the plasters off.

For the last ten years Allcock's Plasters have been used by my family with the best effect in colds, coughs, and pain in the side and back. E. B. SHERWOOD.

192 BROADWAY, ROOM NO. 10, NEW YORK, Jan. 28, 1884.

I first saw what a very fine remedy ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS were when they cured my wife of asthma, and when I was attacked with pneumonia, some three months ago, I first thought of ALLCOCK'S PLASTERS. By the advice of my physician I placed two under each shoulder-blade and two on my chest; in a few hours I breathed easier, the congestion of the lungs was much less, the icy feeling down my spine and in my back vanished; the plasters soon made me so warm that I broke out in a profuse perspiration, and in three days I was well and attending to my affairs. I ought to say that I took two BRANDRETH'S PILLS every night for over a week, which I think helped me a good deal. WILLIAM PERSCH.

Be sure to obtain "Allcock's" Porous Plaster, as all others are worthless imitations.

IN hundreds of instances where Hot Springs and other treatment failed to cure scrofula and syphilitic disorders, the sufferer has sought and found a cure in Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. It enriches the blood, strengthens the urinary and digestive organs, and quickly removes all indications of ill health and blood disease, from a pimple to a running sore, from a headache to a rheumatic pain. Its superiority over all other blood purifiers and strengthening medicines is admitted by all who test its curative effect and influence.

WHEN a rich man dies nowadays he leaves his will to his heirs and his money to their lawyers.

A Popular Fallacy.

Many people think that Rheumatism can not be cured. It is caused by a bad state of the blood which deposits poisonous matter in the joints and muscles causing lameness, stiffness and swelling of the joints and excruciating pains. Kidney-Wort will certainly effect a cure. It acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, stimulating them to a healthy action, purifies and enriches the blood and eliminates the poison from the system. Go to the nearest druggist, buy Kidney-Wort and be cured.

THEY WERE RIGHT

(When the Doctors Called It Gravel,) and Mr. Washington Monroe, of Catskill, Green Co., N. Y., was Fortunate in Using Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, which Entirely Removed the Disease—The Wisdom of Following a Wife's Advice.

"For many years I had suffered from a complaint which the physicians called Gravel. I had employed some of the most noted doctors without obtaining any permanent relief, and for a long time my case was regarded as hopeless. All who knew the circumstances said I must die. Finally, my wife induced me to try a bottle of DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, which she had somewhere heard of or seen advertised. Without the slightest faith in it, but solely to gratify her, I bought a bottle of a druggist in our village. I used that and two or three bottles more, and—to make a long story short—I am now as healthy a man as there is in the county.

"Since then I have recommended DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY to others whom I knew to have suffered from Kidney and Liver complaints; and, I assure the public, that the FAVORITE REMEDY has done its work with a similar completeness in every single instance, and I trust some other sick and discouraged mortal may hear of it and try the FAVORITE REMEDY, as I did."

VOLUME IX. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 1884. NUMBER 27.

A STEAMSHIP LOST.

Lifeboats of the Florida Found, but No Trace of the Vessel.

Several Suspected Dynamiters on Board and the Supposition Expressed That Some of the Deadly Stuff May Have Accidently Exploded.

NEW YORK, May 3.—Austin, Baldwin & Co., agents of the State Line steamships, this morning received a dispatch from Glasgow as follows: "The steamer Devon, New York for Bristol, picked up, April 7, two lifeboats of the State of Florida, without occupants or gear. A sailing vessel bound west was signaled by the steamer City of Rome, April 23, latitude 46°, longitude 42°, had the shipwrecked crew of the State Line steamer on board." The City of Rome arrived at Liverpool April 27, from New York. The State of Florida was of four thousand tons, built at Glasgow in 1879. Among the passengers were Mrs. P. Ward, Cleveland; Henry Wood, Miss Lillian W. Wood, Mrs. E. Wood, M. E. Wood, Miss May Shackleton, of Ohio; Walter King and James G. Graham, of Canada; James Cruikshank, of Braddock, Pennsylvania; Andrew Tarus, Thomas Williamson, Thomas Taylor, Jr., Miss Amy Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. T. Taylor, Mrs. Anna Taylor, Miss Ada Taylor, and Abraham Williamson, of Chicago; George Eddlegton and A. Bethune, of Toronto. When the State of Florida left this port a rumor was current that several of Rossa's agents were on board with dynamite, and detectives were awaiting the arrival of the steamer at Glasgow to arrest the men. This is confirmed by cable from England. Rossa said he knew nothing of the men reported on board.

LONDON, May 3.—The City of Rome makes the following statements with regard to the signals of the sailing vessel spoken April 23: "The first signal was 'Shipwrecked crew,' and then followed two other signals, the first supposed to be 'State,' and presumed to refer to the State of Florida." The Captain of the Devon reports that he picked up two life boats of the State of Florida Sunday evening in latitude 47°, longitude 34°. He feels certain the occupants were taken off by a passing vessel.

GLASGOW, May 2—The manager of the State Line believes there was an accidental explosion of dynamite on the State of Florida. It is believed dynamiters were among the passengers.

The Forest Fires.

WILLIAMSPORT, PENN., May 3.—Latest reports here show the forest fires at various places have been extensive and very destructive. Along the Philadelphia and Erie Railroad, from Driftwood west to Kane, heavy fires were in progress last night. Many cattle are reported surrounded by flames, and a number of fishermen had great difficulty in getting out of the burning territory. A large territory in the Western part of Lycoming County was burned over, but the loss is not very heavy. In Tioga County the fire is general. Large quantities of timber are destroyed along the line of the Tioga Railroad, as well as many houses, barns and other buildings. The town of Thompson is wholly destroyed, including a saw-mill. Loss over $100,000. Seventeen houses were burned in Arning, entailing an additional loss of $15,000; 2,000,000 feet of lumber also burned. The fire is fierce about Morris and Antrim. Considerable pine timber was among the property burned in different parts of Tioga County. The saw-mill of Andrew Kauli, at Spring Run, Elk County, was destroyed with 2,000,000 feet of lumber; no insurance. The saw-mill, logs and lumber of Dr. L. M. Otts, at Hemlock Station, same county, were also burned; loss about $6,000; insurance, $4,000. Reports from Center and Clearfield Counties to-day say the loss is not as heavy as was at first reported.

HOUTZDALE, PA., May 3.—The fire which destroyed the neighboring town of Brisbin it is supposed originated half a mile west of Hoover, Hughes & Co.'s mill, where some Hungarians set fire to the bush to clear a piece of ground for cultivation. Wind carried the flames to the saw-mills, and they were quickly swept away. The progress of the fire was then very rapid through the town, and the inhabitants were compelled to fly in every direction, and in many cases without sufficient clothing. When the first alarm was received, the business people placed every team at the disposal of their neighbors, and every bar-room was closed.

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., May 3.—The entire village of Gilman's Depot, on the Port Jervis and Monticello Railroad, burned yesterday afternoon and last night. The residents were obliged to flee for their lives, and were unable to save anything. Not over half a dozen houses are standing in a radius of five miles. The fire is still burning. Gilman's tannery and saw-mill were destroyed. The whole settlement was owned by him. Loss $100,000. Two railroad bridges burned.

EMPORIUM, PENN., May 3.—The forest fires in this section yesterday swept over at least fifty thousand acres, destroying, as far as ascertained, four large mills and some thirty other buildings, besides an immense number of lumber logs. People are everywhere fighting the flames. The heat is intense and the air suffocating, while the smoke obscures the sun. The loss on mill property, lumber, etc., amounts to $100,000. The damage to standing timbers can not be estimated.

Exploring Alaska.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 2.—The U. S. revenue steamer Corwin sails to-morrow for Alaska, with Lieutenant Doty and party, who have been specially detailed by the Treasury Department to explore the new river discovered last year in Alaska by Lieutenant Stoney. The latter left three weeks ago on the the schooner Ounalaska, under Government orders to continue his explorations of the river. The fact that Doty, of the marine service, is ordered to follow Stoney and explore his discovery, excites much comment in naval circles here.

Five Men Killed.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., May 3.—A boiler at the Whitney Marble-works, Gouveneur, exploded this afternoon, killing five men and fatally injuring two. The building is a total wreck.

DESTRUCTIVE CONFLAGRATIONS.

Forest Fires Doing Immense Damage—The Inhabitants of the Towns Battling With the Flames.

NEW YORK, May 2.—Forest fires in the country round about fill the atmosphere here with smoke. Middletown, N. Y., reports that the mountains west and north of the Shawangunks and Catskills are on fire. A strong wind is blowing, and it is possible to see only a short distance. Fires are raging on the Storm King Mountain, near Cornwall, and in the Highlands west of Haverstraw. The air of Newburg is filled with smoke and ashes and burned leaves are floating about. Much damage to standing timber is apprehended. A dispatch from Wilkesbarre, Pa., says that forest fires have been raging fiercely thereabouts lately. The first serious damages was reported this afternoon. Whitehaven and neighboring hills caught fire, and for a time the town was in great danger, owing to the strong wind. The fire department of Wilkesbarre, with the whole population of the place, subdued the fire. At California, a lumbering town near Whitehaven, a fierce fire started, and eleven houses occupied by men in the lumbering business, were burned. Two bridges on Bear Creek branch of the Lehigh Valley road were destroyed; also, the stables of Albert Lewis & Co., lumber contractors. Eleven horses also perished in this fire, and a large quantity of valuable timber was destroyed. The fire is now under control. Washington, N. J., telegraphs: An extensive conflagration is raging in the Blue Mountains, twenty-five miles from here. The wind carries the smoke in dense clouds over this part of Warren County. This afternoon it became completely dark, and a smoky pall, almost suffocating, rests over the town. The inhabitants are alarmed, and the Mayor has requested a number of the members of the fire company to remain on duty during the night. A large tract of valuable woodland is burning about three miles from Mattamany, threatening a number of residences. The farmers are fighting the flames. Near Ashland, Pa., extensive fires are raging, and the Ashland Fire Department has been ordered in readiness for service at the State miners' hospital. Workmen are now fighting the flames near the building. The loss to timber tracts will be large. A heavy wind storm visited Northumberland County, Pa., to-day, and fanned to an increased fury the forest fires. The works of Charles Woods and 5,000 cords of charcoal were destroyed. Fires also ignited Culm Bank at Mine Hill and Gap Colliery. The mine is in danger and three hundred men are thrown out of employment. The towns are befogged by smoke from the burning mountains. Emporium, Pa., sends word that forest fires are raging all through that section. This season everything is unusually dry, and the wind is blowing a perfect gale from the west, sweeping the fire through the forest with great velocity, and destroying a large amount of property. At Sterling Run, nine miles from Emporium, several buildings belonging to the tannery company burned to-day, and a large mill was also destroyed. The village was only saved by aid from Renova. Two families are reported lost, and it is feared the loss of life will be great. At Swissmont, fifteen miles west of here, two mills, with a large amount of lumber, were destroyed.

Desperate Fight With Burglars.

PITTSBURG, PA., May 3.—A posse of citizens of Kittanning, headed by District Attorney Buchanan, of Armstrong County, had a desperate encounter with three burglars to-day. The section of country about Kittanning has been infested by burglars for some time past. Night before last they entered the Allegheny Valley Railroad ticket office and several other buildings, secured a large amount of plunder and escaped in a skiff. County Detective Stevenson, accompanied by three citizens, started in pursuit. They overtook the burglars, Daniel Mitchell and Sol and George Haynes, in a lonely place, but were discovered, and compelled to retreat before they could draw their weapons. Each of the burglars was armed with two self-cocking revolvers, and had covered the officers as they came up. This afternoon the citizens' posse, under command of the District Attorney, renewed the chase. Telegrams from Kittanning report that there was a conflict, that a number of shots were exchanged, and that several persons were killed. No details were given, and none can be obtained to-night, as the office at Kittaning closes at an early hour. The Haynes brothers and Dan Mitchell were seen yesterday carrying plunder to a deep hollow, a mile below Manorville, where they secreted it, and where the encounter occurred this afternoon. The men were desperate characters, and since their release from the penitentiary have been a terror to the community.

Murdered His Brother-in-law.

HARRISONVILLE, MO., May 2.—James Maxwell, aged twenty-seven, a druggist, at Westline, Cass County, shot and killed Newton Lafoor, his brother-in-law, near that place, last night, firing through a window of the former's house. Lafoor's wife and three small children remained alone in the house all night fearing to venture out. This morning the alarm was given, and scouting parties went out. Meanwhile Maxwell had gone to Paola, Kansas, but returned to-night, was arrested, and is now under the protection of a guard. The feeling runs high, and there are fears of lynching. The trouble is understood to have grown out of attentions paid to LaFoor's sister by young Maxwell.

The Female Lawyer.

PHILADELPHIA, May 3.—Judge Thayer today delivered an opinion in the Court of Common Pleas, No. 4, admitting Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore to practice. Every other Common Pleas Court has refused her admission, although exceptional action was taken some time ago by the Orphans' Court, where the lady is a practitioner. Judge Arnold dissents from the opinion of his colleagues, Thayer and Elcock. The Court took the ground that its action was sustained by the common law right, which the Legislature had not interfered with by statute.

Rumored Mine Disaster.

PITTSBURG, PA., May 2.—It is rumored to-night that an explosion of firedamp occurred this afternoon in the Allegheny Valley Coal Mines, nine miles from Parker, Pa., and that a number of miners were killed.

VIENNA, May 4.—Owing to the discovery at Moscow of a plot to assassinate the Czar the festivities in honor of the coming of age of the Czarevitch will be held in St. Petersburg.

Pennsylvania Outlaws.

KITTANNING, PA., May 4.—The reported encounter between the Haynes brothers and Dan Mitchell and the Sheriff's posse did not take place. After the failure of Officer Stiveson and his assistants to arrest them, the Sheriff's posse of fifteen started after them, but so far have been unable to find any trace of the outlaws. It is reported that they robbed a store at Cochran's Mills last night. A vigilance committee is forming throughout Armstrong County, and if captured they will be lynched. Last night Officers King, Oshea and Staley attempted to arrest three brothers named Skelly, who resisted, and in the encounter which ensued King was shot twice in the head, and Oshea and Staley had narrow escapes, each having a bullet hole through his coat. About twenty shots were exchanged. The three Skellys were arrested to-day and are now in jail. They have the reputation of being desperate men.

Freight Conductor Killed.

BUNKER HILL, ILL., May 4.—After leaving the station last night freight train No. 35, west-bound, divided one mile south of the city. A. H. Coker, conductor, was thrown off the caboose across the track, its wheels passing over the small of his back, mangling him, and causing death an hour later. The deceased was unmarried, and aged thirty years. The remains were forwarded to Mattoon this morning, where his mother and step-father reside. A brother met a similar fate a year since a few miles further south. A brakeman on the caboose with him was pitched on the forward car, sustaining minor bruises.

The Steamer Florida.

NEW YORK, May 4.—Agent Baldwin, of the State Line steamers, received many inquiries to-day regarding the Florida, but he was unable to give to any of them more than a hopeful reply. There is a general disposition, even among the friends of the passengers, that the vessel was destroyed by dynamite. The steamship Alaska, arrived to-day, brings no news of the steamer State of Florida.

The Texas Floods.

JEFFERSON, TEX., May 4.—The river is higher than for eighteen years. The lower portions of the town are under water, and a number of families forced to abandon their homes. Wheelock, a citizen of the United States, for indemnity for gross outrages and torture inflicted upon him by an officer of that Government, and to demand and enforce in such a manner as he may deem best immediate settlement of the claim. Mr. Lamb gave a brief description of the outrages committed on Wheelock by the officers, in order to extract from him the confession of a crime of which he was not guilty. The joint resolution passed. Mr. Washburn asked leave to report from the Committee on appropriations the joint resolution appropriating $10,000 to defray the expenses attending the visit of the Special Embassy from Siam to the United States, but Mr. Weller objected. WASHINGTON, May 1.—SENATE.—The Senate proceeded to the consideration of bills on the calendar, under the five-minute rule. The first bill to engage attention was one introduced by Mr. Ingalls and reported favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs, to release members of the original Fitz John Porter Court Martial from obligation of secrecy so far as relates to votes of members. Mr. Logan said Congress had no power to release. Mr. Garland moved indefinite postponement of the bill. Agreed to without opposition.

HOUSE.—The morning hour was dispensed with and Mr. Morrison moved the house go into Committee of the Whole on the Tariff Bill, and, pending that, moved that all general debate on the bill be closed at 4 o'clock Tuesday next. Mr. Randall said he had no objection to closing the debate, but hoped he would be accorded an hour Tuesday. Mr. McKinley gave notice that at the conclusion of the general debate that a motion would be made to strike out the enacting clause. The Speaker stated that up to the present time forty-three gentlemen had addressed the committee. Calendar. Mr. McMillan, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the House bill amending the act authorizing the construction of a pontoon wagon bridge across the Mississippi at or near Dubuque. The amendment merely modifies the width of the draw, which, instead of being 500 feet, may be of such width as the Secretary of War may prescribe, not, however, less than 400 feet. Passed. Mr. Cullum, from the Committee on Territories, reported adversely the memorial and joint resolution of the Wyoming Legislature asking additional compensation. Agreed to. Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE.—Without delay the House went into Committee of the Whole on the tariff bill. Mr. Wemple, of New York, took the floor in opposition to the Morrison Bill. In the course of his remarks he pointed to the condition of Ireland as a practical illustration of the free trade policy. Mr. Deuster, of Wisconsin, gave notice of an amendment which he proposed to offer, when the bill was opened for amendment providing that after July 1, 1884, no duty shall be levied on raw material consumed by the people or the factories, and addressed the House in support thereof. He depicted the advantages which would follow placing raw materials on the free list, especially to the commerce of the country with Mexico, South American and Central American and advocated the abolition of the duty on wool as a measure which would benefit both the manufacturers and the farmers. Mr. Belmont favored the bill. Mr. McMillan denounced the present tariff as a monstrous piece of injustice, inequality and false pretense.

WASHINGTON, May 3.—SENATE.—Senate not in session.

HOUSE.—The Chinese Immigration Act occupied the whole day. There was considerable oratory. Mr. Henley made a lengthy address supporting the bill. They also appointed delegates to the Richmond Convention.

CHAS. ROBINSON, aged ten years, son of Henry Robinson, the well-known machinist, of Covington, was instantly killed a few days since on the Kentucky Central railroad. He attempted to get on, and fell under the wheels while the train was in motion. The head was horribly mangled, and the breast was cut in several places.

LOUISVILLE has a new theater, for the accommodation of the colored people.

WHEN Wm. Neal passed from the Courthouse at Grayson, on the 29th, after being found guilty of the murder of the Gibbons children, with the penalty of death, it is said he uttered a coarse horse-laugh, as if in defiance of the court to inflict a punishment that would punish.

A FAYETTE county cat has adopted four young rabbits, which she cares for with the same solicitation that characterizes her attentions to her three young kittens.

A NEGRO named Mal Black was shot and killed by Richard Butts, near Franklin, the other day. Black accused Butts of stealing money from him.

THE DAIRY.

—A Vermont dairyman says a young calf should be fed three times a day. Over-feeding at long intervals, and especially with cold food, kill a good many valuable calves.

—Why is it that Canada makes the best cheese in the country and the poorest butter? The creamery system is almost unknown in the Dominion, but cheese factories flourish like a green bay horse.

—An Orange County, N. Y., dairyman has tested the matter, and found that his milk, sold at three cents per quart, was as good as butter—allowing twelve quarts of milk for a pound of butter—at twenty-eight cents per pound.

—The best butter the country produces is made in Iowa, if we may believe the Boston Commercial Bulletin, which gives this reason: "Corn, which is raised in the West so abundantly, is freely fed to the cows; this produces better milk than hay or mixed food, and this in turn produces better and finer butter. Notwithstanding corn is worth more to the Western farmer than it was even a few years ago, he continues to feed his cows liberally with it, and obtains a higher price for his butter."

—The Holstein cow Echo, belonging to Mr. F. C. Stevens, of Attica, New York, has made a wonderful record. In March she produced 1,931¼ pounds of milk, which made a total for the 307 days she has been in milk of 20,389½ pounds. She has still fifty-eight days to go to complete her year's record. She is now giving from fifty-nine to sixty-two pounds a day, and her owner thinks he can safely calculate on her producing over 3,000 pounds before her time is up, or a total of over 23,000 pounds for the year. It is needless to say that she beats the record.

—An experienced dairyman gives his views upon the conditions necessary to the best butter as follows: Perhaps the soil of a man's farm is low, springy and wet; then the feed will be sour, and you can not get good butter out of that, either dairy or creamery. The flavor of the butter depends largely on the flavor of the feed. In order to make fine butter in the winter time the utmost cleanliness must be observed; must wash the cow's udder in warm water and dry with a cloth. If the atmosphere is bad your milk will be tainted. It depends upon circumstances whether it is safe to set your milk down in an improperly cleaned or an improperly ventilated stable. As soon as the milk comes to the exact temperature of the surrounding air, it absorbs the impurity therein.

—A correspondent of the Country Gentleman remarks: "Heifers that breed young generally make the best cows at maturity. If a heifer has a small bag when she calves, it will increase with age, and when she is at middle age she is altogether better than one that is kept back until she is a cow before she breeds. One three years old before she breeds may do well the first season, but never does well again. The young heifer will begin small and do best at maturity. These conclusions are arrived at after more than fifty years' practical experience. I have known a heifer to drop a healthy calf three days before she was twelve months old, and she had no unusual trouble, and was as well and healthy as any cow. I am the owner of a cow that dropped her first calf at seventeen months old, and was always small of her age. She has always done well, and never needed the aid of a veterinary surgeon."

—A correspondent tells the Country Gentleman that in getting together a herd for the dairy, the aim in the start should be to secure good milkers, whether by purchase or breeding. Some cows lack in richness of milk: the butter made from some milk is white and frothy, or otherwise objectionable. None of this kind is wanted, as it is sure to tell in the general make; quality, in particular, must not be impaired. In order to ascertain the condition of the milk each cow should be tested, and where found lacking, the cow should be discarded. This is very little trouble, and, once done, will do for the lifetime of the herd, which may be extended fifteen years with undiminished usefulness. To keep in the herd during this time several cows of a low standard of milk is a constant drain upon the profit, if not an absolute loss. The importance, then, of beginning with a good herd is apparent.

Feed or Breed.

It is a very popular subject just now for discussion whether feed or breed is paramount in the productive value of an animal, more especially in regard to the yield of butter. One enthusiastic believer in breed asks why any ordinary cow cannot be made to give two pounds of butter a day as a pure-bred Jersey does. Any one can ask questions which will puzzle a wise man to answer. But this question is no puzzle, and would be harder to answer if it were true that a Jersey cow as a rule gave two pounds of butter a day. So far there are about forty of these aristocrats among, perhaps, 40,000 Jersey cows in the country, all pure bred, but not all recorded. But what of the others? It has been said that the average yield of the 39,960 plebeian Jerseys is about three pounds per week. How much does breed for these? On the other hand, native "scrub" cows have been known that, owing nothing to breed at all, have just doubled their yield of butter when fed as well as a Jersey cow usually is, and it is these native cows which have made the dairy so profitable as it is. Also, one might ask, was it breed or feed that made a noted Jersey cow die of milk fever after having been fed daily a bushel of crushed oats and twelve pounds of corn meal and bran, besides other feed to force her to give three pounds of butter a day? Perhaps, it may be said most truly that if our native cows had been fed and cultivated with as much care as the Jerseys have been, they might have outdone them in regard to their product. As it is they have an excellent record, not in any book, but in the enormous aggregate yield of milk, cheese, and butter which has made dairying the most prosperous branch of farming.—N. Y. Times.

THE "cobweb" bonnet is the latest thing in Paris. The frame is in the finest metallic netting, a kind of gauze, over silk which serves as lining. THE day the Bear started north on her Arctic expedition, the officers indulged in a dinner the bill of fare for which was all in French. Two Chicago packers have sailed for Europe with the intention of opening a pork-packing establishment at Bremen. Native hogs will be used, as the American article cannot be imported, and the packing-house carried on on the same principle as those in Chicago. If successful it is believed that similar establishment will be started in various parts of Germany.

IN a school at Lawrence Mass., a teacher sent for an absent pulpil, and when the little boy arrived he gave as an excuse for his tardiness, that his aunt—who was alone in the house—had fainted away. A SCOTCH gentleman, who died of consumption on board a steamer within four days of New York, was buried at sea, against the sorrowful pleadings of his wife. Two charges of dynamite were successfully fired from a twelve-pounder cannon at Greenville the other day. The charge of powder used was an ordinary one. The charge of dynamite was five pounds, and made up in half-pound cylindrical packages, encased in a brass projectile. Two hangings in one week does pretty well for Cincinnati, if one fellow did hang himself.

THE Kentucky Republicans did not instruct for president, but the convention was for Blaine.

THIS State is for Tilden and Hendricks, Henry Watterson to the contrary notwithstanding.

THE Burlington jail can be worked both ways. It can be broken into or it can be broken out of.

TO-DAY the Democratic host of Kentucky are at Frankfort, preliminary to making the windy city a visit in July.

PROHIBITION has acquired a pretty strong hold in this State, there being numerous local laws prohibiting the sale of whisky.

FOR four months has the Legislature labored in vain to accomplish something. The usual number of bills have been passed, but nearly all local, and it is the local grist that impedes the general Legislature.

THE legislature has concluded that the whisky traffic in the State ought to bear the burden of building the branch penitentiary, and an effort is being made to impose a tax on the retail business for that purpose.

BLAINE lacks only 44 votes of having enough to nominate him on the first ballot in the Chicago convention, which places him in a very uncertain attitude as the strongest candidate is nearly always the victim of a wicked combination.

IF ever the county seat should be removed from Burlington, the property in the town is not the only property that will depreciate in value, but that in the surrounding country and more especially that on the dirt roads in this vicinity will suffer.

IT seems that the Government officers in Kenton and Campbell counties, took charge of the sixth district in the Republican State Convention at Louisville last week, and handled it to suit themselves, which, of course, was in the interest of President Arthur.

Floods come and go, but we continue to do business at our old stand in Lawrenceburg, Indiana, and those wanting tombstones or monuments will find our prices and designs most satisfactory. John Beall, of Hebron, is our agent in Boone county. Hurschart & Co., Lawrenceburg, Ind.

IF Boone county had a secure jail the hanging of Charles Dickson would not have occurred, but he would now be serving a term in the Penitentiary. Such a prison as the jail at this place is calculated to incourage mob violence, because it is generally believed that a prisoner can escape almost at pleasure.

THE Louisville convention sat down on John D. White as all other bodies of which he has been a member had done. White wanted the convention to express its disapproval of Walter Evans, assisted by the other Government officers in the State, running the convention, but Evans was in the chair and the resolution was not considered.

Mambrino Patchen leads in number and speed having 8 sons and 7 daughters that have produced 16 trotters in 2:30 and under. Wilkes Boy 2 years old, record 2:30¼, is also out of a Mambrino Patchen mare, and Ike Marvel record 2:30¾, is by a son of Mambrino Patchen.
Mambrino Abdallah's colts are nearly all bay. He is good in all points, great substance and stamina, and was the fastest natural trotter at even 12 months old I ever saw, and I priced him then at $5,000, and not a cent less would have bought him at that time. He is a sure and first-class breeder. I have sold a number of his colts as yearlings for $500 each. I sold a filly at 18 months old for $1,000, and a colt coming 3 years old for $1,200, and a four-year-old for $1,500. He is kindly disposed in or out of harness, and one of the most popular horses in the country to-day.
Lady Ayers (the dam of Mambrino Abdallah) is the dam of Tithe Thorn, who can trot better than 2:30. She is also the dam of Thorn Boy, a colt I sold a few days since at the age of of 18 months for $1,200. Ever colt Lady Ayers has ever produced I have sold for $500, and upwards.
Mambrino Abdallah breeds as fine colts as any horse living, and his colts show extra action, extra size, and always command good prices. Yours Truly, L. HERR.
The undersigned state that we know the horse Mambrino Abdallah, now in control of O. P. Hogan, jun., have examined his colts, and cheerfully recommend this horse to breeders as one of the best in Kentucky. W. W. Adams, Mammoth sale stable, Lexington; J. T. LYNCHED.

Chas. Dickson, cold., taken from Jail, and Hanged by the neck until he is Dead, Dead.

His Last Moments in Jail Spent in Loud Prayer.

Our readers are familiar with the recent account in these columns of the arrest of Charles Dickson, colored, by Constable Moxley, of Walton, at Lonisville, for the theft of Uncle Billy Hiud's money, his detention in and escape from the jail at this place; his recapture while attempting, in company with two others, to rob Conner's store in Walton and his second appearance in the jail of this county last Monday week. Upon his second imprisonment, Dickson at once displayed the spirit of a braggart, and seemed to take pleasure in narrating his numerous thieving exploits upon which he entered immediately after his escape from the jail and as a burlesque on punishment had drawn on the jail walls with a fire coal, a large tree from one limb of which a man was suspended by a rope, while the party who had made fast the rope to the limb was descending, his comrades, which composed the party of lynchers, being stationed beneath the tree. Above the drawing Dickson inscribed his name and had told several parties that represented a mob hanging him, but little did he expect to participate in a real performance he had so faithfully represented with the fire coal.

Each day's confinement made Dickson more impudent, and he had some slight remark to make about nearly every person he saw pass the jail. Monday Saturday he was very light-hearted, spending a good part of the time in singing, and the last accents of him before retiring for the night are that he was composing and singing a song about what robberies he had committed, what he intended to do in that line and that a mob hung him.

It was about 12:30 o'clock Saturday night when a rap on Mr. Cowen's door aroused the family, and upon the appearance of him and his son Thomas the spokesman notified them that they wanted the keys to the jail, that they had come after Charlie Dickson and were going to have him. Mr. Cowen at once understood the situation, and commenced a parley, but was told that if he did not deliver the keys that they would burst open the door—that they did not wish to destroy any of the public property, but that they were determined to have Dickson. Seeing that Mr. Cowen would not deliver the keys a guard was placed over him and his son and work commenced on the jail door with sledges and coal chisles. The outer fastening soon yielded to the heavy blows from the hammers, but the inner door was more stubborn. After considerable ineffective work in the dark, operations were suspended and a light dispatched for. By this time some dozen or so persons were aroused by the noise, but every one who attempted to leave his house was greeted by a hoarse command from a guard, "Get back in there," and they all got back. As soon as the last man arrived work was resumed and in a short time the hasp in which the bolt in the grate door lock was fastened, was broken, and the prisoner who had been praying loud and fast from the time the first blows were struck, was led out and the whole party, numbering 15 or 20, started out the Florence pike. Mr. Cowen had informed them that he had another prisoner in jail, and according to promise they brought him over to the house and delivered him up.

The parties were heavily masked, and left their wagon and harness on the hill near James Westbay's, from which place they hauled their victim to the tree where Smith Williams was hung where the rope, a small cotton one, was thrown over a limb, the negro driven about three feet from the ground, when the rope was made fast around the body of the tree, where he was found hanging very early next morning by Thos. Cowen, Thos. Furlong and the writer, apparently occupying the identical space in which Smith Williams hung.

Early next morning Squire Baker was notified and held an inquest, after which the body was cut down and buried in the pauper burying ground. The body while suspended, was viewed by a large number of people both from the town and surrounding country.

The mob was very poorly organized the leader seeming to have no control, every one speaking, but calling no names. After the hanging it seems that they became demoralized, leaving behind them evidences that may cause them trouble. At Florence X-Roads they turned their wagon over, and in the morning, a buggy curtain and two or three hats were found, and in one was a very neatly embroidered handkerchief bearing three initials. At that point the boisterous conduct of the party frightened the widow Crigler so badly that she and her children were all ready to flee to a neighbor's, when the mob left. Several who saw them there say they all appeared to be about half drunk.

It is supposed that the mob came from Walton and vicinity and that the hanging of Dickson was not for what he had done so much as for what he might do in the event he should escape. The people up there knew him and feared that when again free he might attempt to seek vengeance by use of the torch, and rather than risk the destruction of their property and homes they resorted to the desperate act of taking the life of a fellow man under conditions for which the law of the land has no sanction, but for which it provides severe punishment. Dickson had committed no offense for which the death penalty could have been administered under the law, and the parties who did the work of Sunday morning can present no excuse for their deed, and can only say, as they told Mr. Cowen that "he was not safe in the jail," and that they feared him when at liberty.

Shwahan, the prisoner who was in jail with Dickson, was badly frightened and is anxious to be removed to the Covington jail.

Had the mob of Saturday night been as well disciplined as the one which hung Williams, no track or trace of it could have been visible Sunday morning after the heavy rain which followed the hanging.

For the last eight years Boone county has averaged one negro lynching each year.

NOTES.

It is thought Grant county contributed to the mob.

The indications are that Dickson's body was taken for the benefit of science.

The hats that were found at the Florence X-Roads Sunday morning after the hanging very suddenly left the possession of Esq. E. H. Baker.

Wilson & Riddell have shipped to one firm in Cincinnati, since the middle of February 1,800 dozen eggs and have now on hand 200 dozen, besides having sold a great many to other parties. How will that do for a hen's nest? Can it be beaten in the county?

Everybody down here does a credit business except the sheriff, and when he comes for the cash and the cash he will have. We all take great interest in paying our taxes, and the other day we saw a man in pursuit of the sheriff to pay his taxes. Probably the sheriff was the first in pursuit.

At the other end of the proposed pike the excitement is at fever heat, judging from the way they are subscribing their money, while at this end the proposed road is, apparently, given the cold shoulder. There is not another road in the county that could be piked with as little expense, and of more benefit to those along the route and the public in general. Each one knows just how much it will benefit his neighbor and thinks he ought to subscribe liberally, while it will be of no benefit to them, and they can't subscribe anything. It was alway thus.

A gloom has been cast over this community by the serious illness of Mrs. Dr. Cowen, who, at this writing, is very low and not expected to live but a short time. Her sister, Mrs. McKay, West Virginia, was telegraphed for and arrived here last Thursday.

Your Florence correspondent asked how the expression, "give them goss," originated. We have inquired of several of our old settlers, and are informed that many years ago, in the Bullittsville neighborhood, a gentleman by the name of Gess taught school, and when he whipped a scholar, he whipped very severely, and some of the parents took their children from school on that account, and afterward when there was a fight the exclamation was give him Gess."

The preparation of our hash-le x and renovation of our grinders was unnecessary, as our kind invitation came to hand too late to do us any good, but as the poet says,

We bear it calmly, though a pondcrous woe,
And suffer and more the hand that gives the blow.

TAKE THE RECORDER,

The Chambers Lightning Prot'r

We claim for the Chambers Protector that it is a complete and perfect protection against lightning; that it is the only protection constructed on a scientific basis, and that conforms to every recognized law governing electricity.

How does it protect?

By induction and the power of points.

It is an insulated rod, having no ground connection, and, in the language of Prof. Jenkins, the intimate friend and co laborer of Faraday, "If points are attached to an insulated conductor, and held near an electrified body, they become charged by induction with the opposite kind of electricity. This flies off in sparks or by a silent discharge, and leaves the insulated body. A prominence armed with points can no more be highly electrified than a leaky bucket can be filled with water; the electrified clouds are not attracted to the neighborhood."

The Chambers Protector prevents the development upon the object to be protected of the electricity of the opposite name from that in the cloud.

The Chambers Protector acts through induction; the Franklin, or ordinary rod through conduction.

It repels the stroke by the thoroughly known law of all electric action, that like forces repel each other. Being perfectly insulated, by a secondary pair of poles is developed upon the Chambers apparatus by inductive action. The positive induced pole on the rod repelling the positive primary pole on the cloud, and the negative induced pole on the rod repelling the negative primary pole on the earth. Thus a collision of the primary pair (the cloud and the earth) is prevented by the repellent action of the secondary induced pair.

The Chambers Protector prevents a lightning stroke; the ordinary rod tends to cause one, for, says Prof. Henry, "The fact is established by observation, experiment and theory, that the common style of rod does attract the lightning and receives the discharge not alone silently but explosively."

The Chambers Protector neutralizes and lessens the electric stress or tension by decomposition and dissipation; the ordinary rod increases that stress by concentrating the electric energy.

The greater the tension the more active becomes the current from the points of Chambers' Protector, as, according to Dr. Guillemin, the eminent European electrician, "In proportion as the electricity is developed, it escapes into the surrounding medium (the air) and dissipates." The greater the tension, the more danger from the Franklin, or ordinary rod.

The Chambers Protector depends upon the cloud for its action, hence the greater the tension of the cloud the more powerful the protector is to repel lightning. From this fact it is confidently believed that it will protect from disaster in a cyclone.

The Chambers Protector dispels the accumulation of electricity by repulsion; the ordinary rod accumulates it by attraction. The ordinary rod is based upon Franklin's theory, that the air insulates the rod. Faraday proved that "the air is an active and essential agent in the process of induction, one-half of every molecule of the air becoming positively and the other half negatively charged, and hence carrying off the electricity opposite to that of the cloud" from the points of an insulated protector.

The Chambers Protector is in harmony with every known law of electricity; the ordinary rod is in harmony only with the exploded theories of the past. Not a single house of the thousands armed with the Chambers Protector has been damaged by lightning, while thousands of buildings furnished with the Franklin or ordinary rod are struck every year, property destroyed and human life endangered.

The Chambers Protector has thus been proved to be correct in theory and an absolute protection against damage to property and loss of life.

It is so because it is the practical supplement to the scientific discoveries of Jenklin, De La Rive, Maxwell, Faraday, Henry and all the other great electricians of the last half century.

All rods connected with the earth attract lightning upon the building. The so-called circuit rod has no electric circuit; because the poles are not united, unless the rod should run up into the cloud where the positive pole is.

A practical demonstration of this method of protecting buildings from lightning is both interesting and instructive, and will completely convince anyone that it is founded on true principles and is strictly in accordance with nature's laws, and can be seen at W. E. Piper's store at any time.

We recommend this Protector to the candid consideration of all interested in a perfect protection against lightning.

O, ANXIOUS HEART.

Be quiet, restless heart! The long night lies
In gleams of lingering sunshine on the hill:
The home-bound swallow, twittering as he flies,
Makes silence seem more still.

The shadows deeper grow, and in the woods
The air a latent sweetness holds in fee;
An odor feint of yet unblossomed buds—
So like, dear heart, to thee!

Far distant in the soft, cerulean deep,
Where the horizon bounds the nether world,
Great ships becalmed like brooding birds asleep,
Lie with white sails loose furled.

In peace the day is ended, and the night
Falleth as doth a veil upon the sea;
Along its bosom come with swift winged flight
The gray mists, silently.

O, anxious heart, how nature speaks! Her power
How leisurely she uses! How intense
The infinite peace of her most fruitful hour!
How soft her influence!

Time hath she for her storms to sweep the main;
To rock the tree tops with her winds of wrath;
To bring forth fragrance in the summer rain;
And time for snow she hath!

So, dear, for all thy eager soul desires,
She keeps sweet times and seasons. In her mood
Is hid for thee all passion's subtle fires
To round thy womanhood.

Cease, then! and in this dewy twilight move
As one who asks not whither, cares not why;
This gift for all holds still the Eternal love—
God's endless by and by.

MRS. BATTERBY'S CRAZY QUILT.

Mrs. Batterby was a model wife and mother.

Please to remark, dear reader, I say was, because after carful observation and deep consideration of the subject I am convinced that a woman who allows herself to fall under the baleful spell of "crazy" patchwork becomes surely and swiftly lost to every other influence and heedless of every appeal either to her conscience or her affections.

Well, Mrs. Batterby was a dear little roly-poly of a woman, with dark-blue eyes and a soft, gurgling laugh that was perfectly infectious, and which had the added charm of suddenly bringing into view two rows of little white teeth and some hitherto unsuspected dimples. Her bright brown hair waved naturally on either side of her smooth, white forehead, and Mr. Batterby, who had the reputation of being quite a connoisseur in female beauties and given to admiring showy, brilliant women, thought there never was anything in these days of bangs and frizzes so exquisitely feminine, and bewitching, and suggestive of home and happiness as that tiny white parting in his wife's bounteous brown hair and the little rippling waves on her white brow. However, he simply remarked that he "liked that way of wearing her hair," and let it go at that. In his instantaneous mental conceptions of her there was always distinct in his mind her bright, loving glance, her pretty brow and hair, her dark dress and white apron, and plump white hands; and generally he thought of her with a baby in her arms. They had been married ten years and there had been three children, so that Mr. Batterby had good cause to remember his wife as holding a babe.

I must confess that Mrs. Batterby was not a great reader. But then, her husband was, and as she was very sympathetic and receptive, and was fond of conversation, she became, so to speak, infused with current information, and had the leisure she might otherwise have spent in reading in which to manufacture little ornamental knicknacks for the house. But Mrs. Batterby knew a good many things which books do not teach. She knew corn beef and cabbage make the best dinner for a hungry man in seven cases out of nine. She know that a great many disagreeable things happen in a house which (unless his wife tells him) the master of a house will never know—and it isn't best he should. She knew that as neither Mr. Batterby nor she were angels their progeny would not be, and that therefore diversion was sometimes better than discipline. She knew ——, but there is no editor who can afford to give space enough for the record. Suffice it to say that poor little Peter Lowe, Johnny Batterby's great friend, whose father and mother being missionaries, had returned to their native land after ten years of exile, and having placed their children in good Christian families had gone back childless and free to heathendom, used to wish as he lay crying at night in his lonely bed that he had Mrs. Batterby for mother; and all her children's playmates thought it must be delightful to have a mother who could make such lovely costumes and furniture for paper dolls, or help a fellow so about scrap-books, and kites, and reins. So you see why I call her a model mother. And considering her in the light of a wife, Mr. Perkins, the right-hand neighbor, whose wife, never having had any children, and detesting housework, had become his most invaluable business associate in his dentist's office, and the left-hand neighbor, Mr. Greer, whose wife was very intellectual and wrote works on art, and Dr. Mattock round the corner, whose wife was musical and sang in a choir and at church concerts, etc., and was therefore away from home a good deal—all these held the private opinion that Batterby was a wonderfully lucky man in his wife, and doubted with a slight feeling of envy, if he appreciated his own good fortune.

Such a woman was it who fell a victim to that "crazy quilt" mania which is now insidiously undermining the moral and intellectual character of the females in all ranks of life throughout this whole country.

It was Mme. Pumpernickel, who, being herself demented, introduced this contagious mania into this hitherto happy household. Who was Mme. Pumpernickel? Everybody asked that the moment they saw her. With her gray hair coiled like a coronet on the well-poised head, and her air of breeding, and her lively wit, and her gracious manner one almost expected to hear she was a Duchess. But in reality she was only a woman of defeated possibilities. She might have been a Senator's wife if she had married her first love. She would have been a great writer if she had not been a better talker, and she would have been celebrated as a wonderful conversationalist if she had been born to wealth, and in Boston, instead of spending her first twenty years in learning and teaching music in a Western State.

But despite her disadvantages Mme. Pumpernickel's consciousness of her own superiority to criticism never deserted her, and never failed to impress with more or less intensity those with whom she came in contact.

So when Mme. Pumpernickel opened her valise, and from every part of it came tumbling out silk rags, snippings and clippings of every shade and shape, and she said in her gay way: "I travel like an esthetic ragman. It's my 'crazy quilt.' You must have one. Everybody is making them. They are elegant." Mrs. Batterby immediately decided to have one.

That night, when Mr. Batterby, who as one of Chicago's prominent men, had been requested to attend a "ratification meeting" down-town, arrived home at 10:30 p. m., he looked over the bannisters into the dining-room, and involuntarily exclaimed:

"Up yet? Why what in the world are you doing?"

Well might he exclaim. The floor of the room into which he looked was strewn with rags: the dining-table was heaped with them; and, bending over the table, arrayed in loose wrappers, their cheeks flushed, and their hair dishevelled in their eagerness, were his wife and her guest, pulling about and tossing around the heap of scraps.

"O, I'm making a crazy quilt!" abstractedly returned his wife, scarcely raising her eyes from her work; "Mme. Pumpernickel is helping me plan squares."

Mr. Batterby looked on a moment, his habitual abiding sense of a man's inability to comprehend the mysterious workings of the feminine intellect enabling him to maintain a becoming composure of manner.

"Well, good-night!" he said, with the air of giving up a problem.

But as he turned to go his eye was caught by the familiar pattern of one silken fragment. He drew it from the heap. "My old necktie! another of my scarfs!"

"Now, Gustave!" cried Mrs. Batterby, snatching it away; "you gave up wearing that years ago."

"Here is one I bought in Paris;" said Mr. Batterby, giving another pull at the pile and bringing out a rich blue satin scarf.

"And she is so close and stingy with them! she won't cut one!" cried Mme. Pumpernickel, gaily.

"Here, Mme. Pumpernickel. I'll give you this for your quilt," very gallantly responded Mr. Batterby, handing over the bright silken ribbon.

"Oh!" involuntarily gasped his wife. "Why, Gustave! I've been saving that to use in some such way these five years."

"O, thank you Mr. Batterby! Now I shall always have something to remind me of you in my quilt. Now, you see how your wife feels! But I shall not divide with her."

"No, you keep it all," jocosely advised Mrs. Batterby, keeping up the joke, and he betook himself to bed, leaving the two women delving into their rags.

They finished their squares, though Mrs. Batterby had to let the baby cry a little while till she pieced out a corner: but there was not quite the same cordiality between them as before Mr. Batterby's entrance. Mrs. Batterby's good sense was all that restrained her from jealousy. She knew what a belle and flirt Mme. Pumpernickel used to be, and "really," she was mentally saying, "gray hairs and wrinkles would not prevent her being a coquette yet. Will she really take advantage of Gustave's fun and carry away the scarf she knows I was hoarding?" But Mme. Pumpernickel (who had a keen sense of humor and read Mrs. Batterby's mind like a book) really did carry the scarf away to her room and her valise, and poor little Mrs. Batterby (who lay awake that night planning squares, and thought long about that beautiful tie and Gustave's reckless generosity) never saw again the treasure of which her husband and her guest had so ruthlessly despoiled her.

Immediately after breakfast the next morning the two women sat down to their work.

"I'm going to let Mary dress the baby and pick up the house. I'll just let things go, and devote myself to you."

"Yes, and we'll see how many squares of your quilt we can finish while I'm here."

"We must go to the opera matinee this afternoon, you know."

"Dear me! I hardly feel as if I could take the time," cried Mme. Pumpernickel, who was a musician by nature and training and adored opera.

They worked on their respective squares till the last minute, barely allowing themselves time to dress and swallow a cup of tea each.

"We shall be a little late," said Mrs. Batterby when they were almost at their destination. The next moment she gave a little cry of consternation.

"O mercy! If I didn't leave our tickets on the mantel-piece!"

"How long will it take us to go back for them?"

"Forty minutes, and forty back. Call it an hour and a half. The opera will be nearly over. How stupid of me!"

"Never mind. We can stop and buy that pink satin for your quilt, and then go home and plan two more squares before we have to go to bed."

"I know you only say that to relieve me. You must be dreadfully disappointed! O they're well named crazy quilts!"

"Yes; but you see I must leave you Friday, so there is only one more day for us to work on the quilt. Dear child," pleaded Mme. Pumpernickel, earnestly, and laying her hand on Mrs. Batterby's arm, "don't, don't stop till your quilt is finished."

"Not even to eat and sleep?"

"O, I suppose you'll be obliged to stop for those things," returned Mme. Pumpernickel, half in jest, half in earnest, "but you must not let anything else hinder you. Delay would be fatal. Your ardor would cool."

But Mr. Batterby in the goodness of his heart brought home some theater tickets for that night, and the ladies with secret reluctance tore themselves away from their rags and accompanied him, but the play being a society drama gave great display of costumes, and afforded the two demented creatures many occasions to whisper aside, such as:

"Look at that elegant brocade she has on. Wouldn't I like to have a piece of that in my quilt!"

"See that rich purple velvet in that page's cloak! Wouldn't that show in your square?"

"I'd just like to snip a piece off that lady's bonnet-strings. We haven't any green that lights up at night."

Fortunately Mr. Batterby could not hear these remarks or he might have feared for his wife's mental condition, and as he sat between the ladies in the car returning home they were obliged to make an attempt at least to speak on other topics beside crazy quilts. The next day, to the great delight of the ladies it stormed.

"We shall have no callers, and we can't go out," they said. So they sat in the midst of rags, snipping, clipping, basting, too busy to comb their hair or change their morning dresses until the daylight began to wane.

"O, dear! it's too bad to have to stop, but I suppose we must," said Mme. Pumpernickel. "We must make ourselves decent before Mr. Batterby comes."

And just then there was a ring at the door and a telegram from Mr. Batterby that business would keep him downtown till between nine and ten o'clock.

"And now we needn't dress," joyously cried Mme. Pumpernickel. "I shall finish this square before I go to bed. I am determined on it."

But it did seem to Mrs. Batterby as if the children were never so worrisome before. What was the reason three-year-old Edith should be so tiresome about getting to bed? And then after she was there she wanted the pillow fixed, and the sheet smoothed, and a drink of water, and at the last moment she called her mamma back because she hadn't said her prayers. Then when the impatient mother again reached the stairs the little voice called:

"Mamma, mamma, Edie wants dollie."

The usually gentle mother, frantic at separation from her "crazy quilt," returned, and snatching up the battered, bald headed object of Edie's affections tossed it into the crib.

"There, dollie, get into bed with you," she said, crossly. "You haven't got to say any more prayers, because you haven't got any soul."

Edie snatched up her child and turned on her mother with flashing eyes.

"Tee hab dot tum toul, too!" she roared.

Mrs. Batterby, smitten with remorse, kissed her child and soothed her, and yet it did not occur to the mother how strong and baleful must be the influence which could render her thus hard and petulant to her darling Edith, patient and tender and considerate of the feelings of dollie's mother as she generally was.

The next day Mme. Pumpernickel departed, but the evil which she had disseminated remained. Mrs. Batterby grew worse daily until she became a hopeless crazy-quilt maniac. At last the dusty mantels and book-shelves, the rent table-cloths, the children's buttonless garments, and his wife's neglected toilet began to force themselves even upon Mr. Batterby's unobservant eyes. He began to trace a connection between these things and the different squares of silk patchwork, some one of which was always pinned on the inside of the nursery door. Apparently casual inquiries as to his wife's employments and occupations on different days led [illegible] some other feminine sufferer from the mania had called to leave a fresh collection of rags, or that Mrs. Batterby had been to some neighbor's to leave a bundle of promised scraps for another afflicted creature, or that some recently inoculated woman had called for directions and advice about her crazy quilt. The devoted husband, his attention now drawn to the subject, was alarmed to observe how fixed a hold the terrible mania had taken upon his poor wife's aberrated mind. It was only Sunday she abstained from creative work upon this destroyer of domestic happiness. But it was, after all, only a physical abstinence, for her husband marked her long memorizing gaze upon the illuminated texts above the pulpit wherein the grayhaired minister was impressing upon his hearers the spiritual darkness of the ancient Jews. Subsequently he saw the ornamental "conventional" forms, and the blending of its tints reproduced in the crazy quilt. He even thought with a cold thrill of fear that she might have so far forgotten the teaching of her childhood as to take the needle on Sunday. But no! She was the mother of Sunday-school scholars! He banished the thought. He noted her roving, abstracted gaze over the congregation, and he divined the envy and covetousness in her soul as her eye caught the beauty of some new tint in bonnet trimming.

One cold morning Mrs. Batterby's mother came in from the suburbs, and surprised her daughter with a visit. Now, Mrs. Batterby was also a model of filial affection. One of the things she has learned without recourse to books is that a woman should always live to be a grandmother, because her daughters never appreciate her till they, in their turn, become mothers. But no sooner were the old lady's wrappings off than the crazy quilt was brought to notice, and the daughter could not be induced to make any but a momentary digression on any other subject; but there she sat, only stopping reluctantly for lunch, "feather stitching" on her "square" as if her next day's bread depended on getting it done before night.

"Well, good-by," said the old lady at parting. "If they conclude to send you to the asylum at Batavia, tell them to let me know immediately."

And she went back to the suburbs with a little chill of disappointment at her heart.

But while Mr. Batterby was racking his brain to know how he could surreptitiously minister to his wife's diseased mind a kind Providence was sending a blessing in disguise. It was something like the sensational society drama where the sickness of the child recalls the erring wife back to virtue.

Little Philip fell sick. It was only the chicken-pox, but as the family physician said, "it was not once in a hundred times that there was such a severe case."

The morning of the fourth day of his illness, as the mother sat holding in her gentle arms the little sufferer, whose swollen face was covered with the confluent eruption and whose beautiful blue eyes were closed by the disease, little Edie came and looked at her blind baby brother very thoughtfully.

"Phillie doin' to die?" she lisped.

"O no, darling! mamma hopes not."

"Mamma wouldn't feel so vewy bad. Mamma could work all ze time on her tazy twilt zen," rejoined Edie gravely.

The unconscious reproach went straight to the mother's awakened conscience. As soon as her arms were temporarily freed from their beloved burden she gathered up all the materials of her crazy quilt and put them in a bureau drawer in the sewing-room. In the drawer lay the five yards of dark-green plush for the border; for the squares were all ready to be put together. Five yards at two dollars a yard, ten dollars! And now there was all the expense of Philip's sickness to meet. She half regretted the spending of the ten-dollar gold piece Gustave had given her. He had told her to buy a comfortable house-dress with it. Not that he would ever ask what she did with it. But now she really needed the dress. And ten dollars just for the border of the quilt seemed a good deal. Satin would have been cheaper, of course. But then plush was the thing. Still she sighed a little perplexed sigh as she shut the drawer.

The next Monday morn Bridget left her wash in the tubs, declaring she was sick, and must go home to her aunt's.

"An shure ye wudn't be kapin' back a week's pay for a week's warnin' when I'm that sick I can't stand on my two fate?"

So she got her full pay and she went, and when the strange washerwoman hired to finish the wash was gone it was found that a'l the towels, and handkerchiefs, and stockings had vanished.

Then the intelligence office began to send its Bedouins through the kitchen of poor Mrs. Batterby. It was the same old tribe. In the course of three weeks they had them all—the girl who broke everything from the largest platter down to the handle of the furnace door, the girl who served her hair up with various dressings at each meal, the girl who put her potatoes on to cook when she heard Mr. Batterby's voice in the hall, and baked all the griddle-cakes before the breakfast-bell rang. And so forth and so on. But they lived through it all, as people always do, and nothing ever really came of it all except a secret change of Mr. Batterby's views on the subject of Purgatory, and his growing conviction of a hell as a necessary adjunct to celestial house-keeping.

But in the meantime the crazy quilt was almost forgotten. One day, however, when Mr. Batterby was enjoying a day's vacation in the bosom of his family a lady visitor came in, and somehow the new style of patchwork became the topic of conversation.

"Ah, but you just ought to see my wife's quilt! Go get it, dear, and let Mrs. Smith see it."

"It's not quite finished. Baby's sickness made me lay it away," demurred Mrs. Batterby, who felt a strange reluctance to take out her old enslaver.

"Never mind. Show the squares."

"O do! I should so like to see them."

"Prettiest things you ever saw!" enthusiastically said the proud husband.

Mrs. Batterby rose and left the room. As she went slowly through the hall and up the stairs her mind vividly recalled that ten dollars worth of plush. It seemed a pity not to let Mrs. Smith see that, and get a clear idea of the whole effect of the quilt. But it might set Gustave thinking. Of course the gold piece had been her own. Yet he would be astonished at her extravagance. At least he would think it extravagance.

So thinking she opened the drawer. It was empty.

Mrs. Batterby stood confounded. The other drawers were packed with old half-worn garments to be remade. No quilt in them. Gone—plush and squares. Also the gingham for aprons, and her unmade calico dress.

With a lightning flash she recalled sending Bridget to the bureau one Sunday afternoon for flannel for Philip. The next Monday she left.

Mrs. Batterby went back to the sitting-room. She was pale but dry-eyed. She told her woe.

"Never mind, my darling!" said her husband, putting his arm about hers "I'll buy you a handsome Marseilles spread."

Her hours, and days, and weeks of slavish work rose up before Mrs. Batterby's mind. The tears gushed from her eyes.

"A Marseilles spread! What does a man know about a woman's feelings?" she sobbed.—Amelia Sullivan, in Chicago Tribune.

The Economics of Disease.

There is one side of preventive medicine that may be urged upon the public with a strong chance of securing their attention, and that is the expensiveness of disease. In their individual cases they appreciate it well enough, and often howl loudly about loss of time and heavy bills at the doctor's and druggist's. But with the narrowness of view and selfishness of interest which generally characterize mankind, it is hard to get them to look at its cost in gross.

This may be estimated in several ways, and includes a number of factors. It has been calculated by statistical hygienists that of the cases of disease now current in civilized communities, about one-third could have been prevented by intelligent sanitation, personal or general. In our opinion this estimate is too low, rather than too high; but take it at one-third. Then the actual loss to these patients or their families is represented by one-third the whole amount paid doctors, druggists, nurses, etc., in a community, plus the loss of time, whatever that may be.

But this is only the first item in the bill of charges.

One-third of all the investment locked up in hospitals, dispensaries, asylums, homes, etc., could be placed to profitable and productive use were the laws of health observed.

Much more than this; numerous limited localities, vast tracts of fertile land, now shunned or but partly tilled, because of their ill repute on the score of health, would be doubled, quadrupled, in selling value and producing power, were they made free from the poisons which infest them. Millions of acres of the finest soil in the United States are lying idle by reason of the paludal poisons which are generated about them. Yet there is strong testimony that systematic action on the large scale can overcome these miasms.

We have spoken only of disease, but we must also take into account the sequelæ of disease in destroying ability to work, and thus casting the heavy expenses of permanent invalidism on the family or the commonwealth, or by a fatal result depriving the community of a life which would have possessed a value as capital applied to the production of wealth.

This has been the subject of calculation by political economists in England and Germany, and in both countries they have reached the conclusion that the value of an unskilled laborer, at twenty-five years of age, to his country is $1,200. In other words this is the average sum which such a person will contribute during his life to the wealth of the community in which he lives. Now, if we suppose one third the deaths in a community are preventable, we can readily see how much richer the community would be were it to exercise the necessary prophylaxis.

These are but a few of the practical considerations to which this subject leads, but they will serve as hints how strong a case may be made of this side sanitation.—Medical and Surgical Reporter.

—The caustic nature of lime corrects injurious matter, such as sulphate of iron in the soil. It also helps to break up and pulverize stiff clays, improving their texture. It decomposes inert vegetable matter, peat, roots, etc. It hastens the decay of stable manure and dead carcasses, putrescent matter, etc., but in all such cases if the manurial qualities are to be made useful, they must be covered with earth during the action of the lime to absorb the ammonia.—Exchange.

—As to the question: Will a change from North to South change the character of apples? It will not change their nature but it will change their season, the Winter apples becoming Fall or Summer fruit, and the Summer and Fall sorts much ealier.—Cleveland Leader.

The Trouble With the Great Edifices.

The construction of these immense commercial buildings in this city, which now awaken admiration, will lead to difficulty in the settlement of estates. For instance, D. O. Mills' grand building in Broad street cost $3,000,000. In case of his death it would probably be brought to the hammer, and where could a purchaser be found for such a property? There, too, is the Cyrus W. Field building, which cost $1,500,000. As long as he lives there is no trouble, but when his estate is to be settled the question arises, how will the building be divided? Real estate auctioneers say that when a property is worth more than $400,000, it is impossible to get its value at auction. Another very important risk is found in the prospective removal of the stock exchange. Should this take place the Mills building would not be worth half the amount paid for the land, and the same statement applies to all those immense structures which now form such a feature in the lower part of the city. Even a real estate owner may commit the error of "putting too many eggs in one basket."—N. Y. Letter.

—Boys intending this summer to emulate the bold hunters of the prairies, who live on roots when game is scarce, should take warning from the boys of the training-ship Cumberland, stationed on the Clyde. Ten of them were recently reduced to unconsciousness and made dangerously ill by eating a bark which turned out to be a species of hemlock.

—A woman should make herself the center of attraction in her home, and nothing is to be despised that will add grace and beauty to her appearance; and in these days when the cheapest calico is a marvel of delicate coloring and artistic design, it is in the power of every woman to make at least a neat and tasteful appearance.—Detroit Post.

CURE OF RHEUMATISM.

ROCKAWAY BEACH, N. Y., Jan. 16, 1884.

I am a carpenter. A year ago I was laid up with rheumatism in my arms which drove sleep from my pillow, and rendered life a burden. After having tried for three months in vain all kinds of "cure" physicians, I was induced by Michael Holland, our Postmaster, to try BRANDRETH'S PILLS. He said they cured him after a year of suffering. I took six pills every night for three nights; then I took two pills every night for ten days. At the end of fifteen days I was entirely well. Occasionally I have a slight twinge after being exposed to dampness or wet, but two pills taken every night for four days drives it away.

JAMES HENRY.

ROCKAWAY BEACH, N. Y., Jan. 16, 1884.

The statement in the foregoing letter made by James Henry, I know to be true, as I, also, know it to be true that BRANDRETH'S PILLS cured me of a terrible attack of rheumatism which had confined me to the house for several months. I, however, took two pills every night for a month.

MICHAEL HOLLAND, Postmaster,
Oceanus Post-Office.

"TRUST men and they will be true to you," said Emerson. But then this opinion was not founded on keeping the subscription list of a newspaper. Oil City Derrick.

IT makes every humanitarian sad to see invalids seek such relief as is given them by the use of bitters, kidney medicines, and other nostrums. The first few doses may make them feel better on account of its stupefying ingredients, combined with some strong cathartic and diuretic that are used in its composition, but they eventually grow worse. The only cure for weakness, nervousness, debility, aches, pains, rheumatism, sores, urinary and digestive troubles, is to make the blood rich, red and pure, by using Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla, a remedy widely indorsed by physicians who have examined into its composition and effect.

LIFE is short—only four letters in it. Three-quarters of it is a "lie" and half of it is an "if." Put this on "file" if you would as "lief."—Exchange.

The Great American Chorus.

Sneezing, snuffling and coughing! This is the music all over the land just now. And will be until June. "I've got such an awful cold in my head." Cure it with Ely's Cream Balm or it my end in the toughest form of Catarrh. May be you have catarrh now. Nothing is more nauseous and dreadful. This remedy masters it as no other ever did. Not a snuff nor a liquid. Applied by the finger to the nostrils. Pleasant, certain, radical.

A WESTERN paper heads an article "Crumbs of Crime." They came from too much of a loaf.—N. Y. Graphic.

THE chance concoctions of ignorant men have sometimes brought disrepute not only on their own worthless medicines that deserve no credit, but sometimes, with much injustice, on really reliable preparations. Ladies should not hesitate about Mrs. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for this remedy has been tried, proven and praised for years.

Mr. D. H. BARNABY, of Owego, N. Y., says that his daughter was taken with a violent cold which terminated with Pneumonia; the best physicians gave the case up, when a friend recommended DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. She accepted it as a last resort, and was surprised to find a marked change, and by persevering a permanent cure was effected.

SOME PLAIN FACTS.

Statement of a Gentleman of Rochester, N. Y., Showing the Power of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy (of Rondout, N. Y.) over Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder.

No pain which man has to endure surpasses that of gravel. "I would rather die," exclaims the patient, "than have such attacks very often." It caused the death of Napoleon III. Mr. R. Dewitt Parsons, of 271 Plymouth Avenue, Rochester, N. Y., recently had a remarkable experience with it. He is a well-knit, fine-looking, hearty-appearing gentleman. One day he was prostrated with pain from the small of his back to the abdomen. For some time previous his appetite [illegible] bowels inactive, and he had felt sore above his hips. After voiding water he had a severe pain and gnawing sensation. "For some time my disorder mystified me," he said, "but one day I read of a case very like my own in a paper. I wrote the person whose name appeared, and he confirmed it fully. From that little incident I discovered I had stone in the bladder and gravel in the kidneys. I was greatly alarmed then, but the disease has lost its terrors to me now, for I am fully recovered—cured by DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY (of Rondout, N. Y.), which I most cordially commend to all persons suffering from kidney disorders, pain in back, stone or gravel. My wife also regards it as especially excellent for women. Dr. Kennedy has performed many surgical operations for stone, when also prevented removal through the natural channels, and he has never lost a case!

It is the possession of this grand requirement which makes Hostetter's Stomach Bitters so effective as an invigorant. For sale by all Druggists and Dealers generally.

POISON

In the blood is apt to show itself in the Spring, and nature should by all means be assisted in throwing it off. Swift's Specific does this effectively. It is a purely vegetable, non-poisonous remedy, which helps nature to force all the poison or taint out through the pores of the skin.

Mr. Robert A. Easley, of Dickson, Tenn., writes, under date March 10, 1884: "I had chills and fever followed by rheumatism, for three years, so that I was not able to attend to my business; had tried almost every kind of medicine, and found no relief. A friend recommended Swift's Specific. I tried one bottle and my health began to improve. I continued until I had taken six bottles, and it has set me on my feet, as sound and well as ever. I recommended it to all similarly afflicted."

EUROPEAN ROMANCE.

Death of a Noted London Deaf and Dumb Peddler.

A Swiss Gentleman of Fortune Quarrelled With His Betrothed, and Became a Voluntary Exile for Twenty Years.

LONDON, May 10.—The famous deaf and dumb nick-nack peddler, who, during the past fourteen years, attracted so much attention on London Bridge, is dead, and the subject of the latest sensation. He died in the Southwark Work-house, near the south end of the bridge. Despite his infirmities he managed to support himself by his small sales, and securing official and police favor by the gentleness of his demeanor and the intelligence of his conduct, he was allowed to occupy the same post on the great thoroughfare from year to year. Before his death the peddler beckoned to a hospital attendant and terrified him by speaking to him. When the attendant recovered from his astonishment, the beggar confessed that his deafness and dumbness had been feigned. He said he was a Swiss gentleman of fortune, and belonged to one of the best families in the Republic. When a young man he was betrothed to a beautiful and accomplished lady. He was possessed of a most violent temper, and, in a lover's quarrel over a trifle, one day, he so wounded the girl by the bitterness of his invective that she fell ill. The reproaches of his friends for his cruel conduct threw him so that he became melancholy from remorse and left home. He then resolved to punish himself. He vowed to become a voluntary exile for twenty years, to earn his own living, leave his fortune untouced, keep his relatives and friends ignorant of his whereabouts, and go bareheaded and barefooted in all weather during the entire time, and to listen to no one and speak to no human being during the ten last years of his exile. If he lived to complete his vow he meant to return home, and use his fortune and the remainder of his days in making his betrothed happy, provided she were alive and unmarried. He had rigidly kept his vow. "But," he cried before he expired, "my time is not quite up, and I must die before it is. I have been punished as I deserved." Investigation, so far as it has gone, has proven that the peddler's story is entirely true and his family in Switzerland have been made acquainted with his death.

A Priest Robbed of $13,000.

FORT WORTH, TEX., May 10.—A heavy robbery occurred on the westbound Texas Pacific train just as it pulled into the union depot here to-night, in which an Italien or Spanish priest named J. Casima, from Chicago, on his way to California, was robbed of $13,000. While the priest was paying for a lunch in Dallas early this evening he made a display of his money. After the train left Dallas he was approached by three men, who tried to make his acquaintance, but were unsuccessful. As the train was slecking in the depot three strangers crowded on the car platform with the priest. One seized his arms while another rapidly searched him, finding a large pocketbook containing all his money in a hip pocket. The priest recognized one of the robbers as one of the men who attempted to make his acquaintance, but could not seize either before they disappeared in the crowd. After the train had left Ft. Worth a short distance the priest, who continued aboard, was again on the platform and saw and recognized the robber as he got on the train. This fact has been telegraphed ahead to the authorities, and it is believed that at least one of the robbers will be captured yet to-night.

Gordon Rescue Fund.

LONDON, May 10.—Baroness Coutts has received many entreaties to establish a fund for the rescue of Gordon. A relief expedition to Khartoum starts in July. It will probably number 8,000, including an Indian contingent. It is supposed the main expedition will proceed up the Nile, and the other by the Red Sea. A camel depot will be established at Assouan. A Government telegram states that Dongola is safe from the Mahdi. The rebels have occupied Meraweh, south of Dongola. The country south of Debbah, a few miles south of Old Dongola, is in open rebellion. Forces have been sent to reopen the road beyond Debbah. The Khedive has decreed Lieutenant Chermside Governor of Suakim. At a meeting of three thousand Conservatives at Manchester, to-day, resolutions were adopted condemning the abandonment of General Gordon by the Government.

CAIRO, May 10.—It is reported that General Lord Wolsely will command the British expedition to Khartoum in October.

A Druggist's Deadly Dose.

PITTSBURG, PA., May 10.—Jacob Spohn, a druggist, was committed to jail by the Coroner to-day on a charge of murder. On Thursday last, a small boy, ten years of age, was sent to his establishment to purchase castor oil for Mrs. Gallagher, an aged lady. Spohn directed his clerk, a young man, who had only four weeks' experience in the business, to mix up one-half ounce of aqua-ammonia and one-half ounce sweet oil. The bottle containing the medicine was not labeled, and the old woman took the entire contents and died. The drug clerk said he understood the boy to ask for liniment. A post-mortem examination of the remains show that death was caused by the dose.

Chose Shooting.

SALT LAKE, UTAH, May 9.—Fred. Hopt, alias Welcome, three times tried and convicted of murder, is now sentenced to be executed June 13. The Utah statute permits persons sentenced to be executed to choose hanging or shooting. Hopt chose shooting as the manner of taking off. His attorneys gave notice of appeal. Should a stay of execution be ordered, there will be danger of lynching. The murder was committed four years ago. The case has cost the Territory $15,000.

Why Gladstone Was Hissed.

LONDON, May 9.—The Times, referring to the hisses and groans with which Gladstone was greeted yesterday, at the health exhibition, says: "We are hardly wrong in supposing the feeling of discontent, which is gradually gathering since the nervelessness of the Government's policy in Egypt became apparent, is immensely increased by the treatment of Gordon."

A TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

During the Progress of a Base Ball Game—Forty Persons Injured.

CHILLICOTHE, O., May 8.—During the progress of a game of base ball this afternoon between the Riversides, of Portsmouth, and the Logans, of this city, the new grand stand fell with a crash, there being 196 people upon the seats. The audience arose in their seats to applaud when the eastern half went down with its living freight. Two seconds later the western part followed, and the roof crashed down upon all. Nearly two hundred people were struggling beneath the ruins. A few minutes after the fall the light roof had been lifted from the mass, and the victims were all removed. Many of them, probably forty in all, were more or less wounded, many seriously. It is hoped, however, that no fatalities will result. Not a stick remains standing, and, looking at the utter ruin, one wonders that a single soul escaped. Following is a list of the more seriously injured: Ned Kendrick, three-inch scalp wound. John Higbee of Higbee Station, right leg broken at the ankle. Miss Irene Faus, terrible scalp wound, extending nearly around the head. John H. Campbell, change pitcher of the Riversides, head cut and many severe bruises. Mecauley, their change catcher, had his nose broken. Ben Friedman, three-inch cut on top of the head. Joseph McGiss, terrible scalp wound, with a possible fracture of the skull. Albert Wall, Portsmouth, back injured. Dr. J. M. Hanley, back seriously injured and had internal injuries. J. Clifford Douglas, severe scalp wound and [illegible] injuries. Frank Cahill right leg badly battered and cut. James Roberts, Portsmouth, sprained back and leg and hurt internally. Chas. Ald, four-inch cut on head. James C. Quinn, bad wound on scalp. Thos. G. McKell, leg bruised and sprained. Captain Frank T. Gilmore, hip injured. Wm. McCollow, of Portsmouth, right foot crushed. Martin Keller and Peter W. Neudorfer, both of Portsmouth, had their right arms seriously injured. James Stevenson, Portsmouth, right leg terribly bruised. Jerry O'Keefe, left arm hurt and internal injuries. Warren Chapman, wound on leg. Henry Burt, hip injured. Nick McGiss, Bert Mitchell and Vinton P. Safford received very ugly cuts on the head. Manager Cannon, of the Riversides, was badly cut up about the face and hands.

A Prussian Borgia.

LONDON, May 10.—Elberfield, in Rhenish Prussia, near Dusseldorf, has been relieved of its local excitement over the poisoning case of Mrs. Annie Stutt, by her conviction to-day on charges of having rid herself of two obnoxious husbands by administering poison to them in their food. The first husband became tiresome to her when she fell in love with Stutt, and Stutt, it is charged, aided her in her first Borgian attempt. She soon became weary of him too, and, becoming enamored of a third lover, managed to have Stutt fall seriously ill and die before he could make any disclosures. In her second effort to become a widow, Mrs. Stutt acted alone, not daring to take her lover into her confidence. He became alarmed at Stutt's sudden demise, and broke off his relation with the woman. This attracted suspicion, and led to the investigation which resulted in the women's trial and conviction. The prisoner is rather prepossessing in appearance. She was sentenced to fifteen years' penal servitude.

Washington's Monument.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—Arrangements are being made, under Colonel Casey's direction, for the difficult task of constructing a pyramid top to the Washington Monument. The construction of this marble pyramid would be far from an easy task on the ground, and at this giddy height will become one of the greatest of engineering feats. A model has just been prepared, illustrating the methods of supporting the works during the progress of raising the stone setting, the courses, and shifting the wooden scaffoldings that must support the ninety tons of masonry. Numbers of visitors are making interesting and impressive trips to the summit of the monument. The passage is like going through a tunnel toward heaven, and nine minutes are passed in utter darkness before the top is reached.

Strange and Fatal Proceeding.

LA VALLE, WIS., May 10.—Last night a man about sixty-five years old, supposed to be John McDougell, of Brussels, Ont., either fell, or was thrown from the St. Paul train two miles west of this place. Two hours later the engineer of the St. Paul train, bound east, and rounding a curve, saw the man in his shirt sleeves, waving his vest, and standing on the track. Before the train could be stopped it struck and killed him. The train brought the body to this place, and an inquest was held to-day. On his person was found a first-class ticket from Brussels, Ont., to Portage, Manitoba, and some letters. Telegrams received from Brussels identify the man, and state that his wife and daughter were on the train with him.

Riotous Strikers.

QUINCY, ILL., May 10.—A party of twenty masked men attacked an express wagon containing non-Union moulders this morning, firing revolvers freely. The driver of the express wagon and one non-Union man named Forman received severe flesh wounds. The others fled. The Wabash train due here at ten minutes to eleven o'clock brought in another lot of non-Union men. The strikers had been advised and were at the depot. A telegram was sent for the men to get off the train a mile north of the depot. The strikers heard of it, and were there as soon as the train. When the men began to get off the train rocks began to fly and shots were fired. Several non-Union men were hit, and one knocked off the platform and beaten dangerously. No arrests thus far.

DRIVEN CRAZY.

A Young Mother's Devotion to Her Dying Children,

Causes Her to Become Insane—The Sad Effects.

BALTIMORE, Md., May 11.—A sad case of insanity, caused by a mother's devotion to her sick children, has just been brought to light by the removal of the victim to the asylum for the insane. About seven years ago Miss Ella Sherwood, a pretty young girl residing in Frederick County, Md., married a young farmer named James Douglas, of Hartford County. Mr. and Mrs. Douglas located near Pleasantville, and two pretty children were the fruit of the union. About three weeks ago the children, aged three and five years, were taken sick with whooping cough. Mrs. Douglas nursed them, and for days never left their bedside. On Sunday last she was herself taken ill, from over exertion and fatigue, and was compelled to take to her bed. On Monday she became delirious, and it was thought she would die before her children. On Monday night, about midnight, the youngest child breathed its last, and the next night the eldest child died. The corpses were prepared for burial and placed in the parlor adjoining the bed-room occupied by Mrs. Douglas. The husband of the latter sat up with the corpses on Tuesday, and about midnight Wednesday, becoming exhausted himself from loss of sleep, he went into a side room and napped for a few hours. He awakened about three o'clock the next morning and discovered that during his absence from the parlor the dead body of the youngest child had been taken from the coffin and carried away. The occupants of the house were aroused, and a search developed that Mrs. Douglas, mother of the children, had, during her delirious moments, arisen from her sickbed, gone to the parlor, and taken the corpse to an outbuilding, where she was found later with the dead babe clasped tightly to her bosom. Physicians were summoned and she was declared insane.

A Murderous Madman.

DECATUR, ILL., May 11.—The city was greatly excited today by the sanguinary actions of a lunatic named Lamar, who has escaped from some as yet unknown asylum. He reached the city during the night, and took possession of the temporarily vacant house of Mertie Blinz. Blinz drove him out, when the madman produced a revolver and shot several times at Blinz, driving him away, when he again took possession of the house. A posse of nearly 300 accompanied Blinz and the officers to the house, when the lunatic fired again and again, one hitting Blinz on the arm, inflicting a serious wound. He then began an attack on the crowd with knives and a cleaver he found in the house, Blinz being a butcher. Lamar was finally felled with a club by an officer, who climbed to the second story window on a ladder. He was then overpowered and pinioned, and taken to jail.

A Fatal Dose of Laughing Gas.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., May 11.—Kate Emmer, a young lady living at Riverside, N. J., died yesterday from the effects of "laughing gas," administered by a Philadelphia dentist. Two weeks ago she had sixteen teeth extracted, and after the operation showed signs of insanity. She made an attempt at suicide by throwing herself in the river and refused food. From a buxom girl of 160 pounds she wasted away to a mere skeleton. The physicians state that her death was produced by the shock attendant upon the three doses of the gas given by the dentist.

Another Sinking Town.

ZANESVILLE, O., May 11.—The town has been in an excited state to-day over a supposed earthquake near Blandy avenue, in the Fourth Ward. At 10 o'clock this morning a terrible crack was heard, and about three acres of ground sank several feet, carrying a number of houses, which was badly damaged. The inhabitants of that vicinity were panic stricken. A fissure opened about 150 feet deep. The only plausible theory is that several deserted coal mines have caved. No loss of life is reported.

FRANKFORT, May 8.—SENATE.—Among the bills passed were the following: To encourage grape-growing in Cumberland County. To amend Articles 5 and 6, Chapter 92, of General Statutes, title "Revenue and Taxation." Regulating the time of holding courts in the Sixteenth District. To repeal an act fixing the fees of jailers for keeping prisoners. To prevent the sale of liquors in a portion of Morgan County. In regard to any national education funds and the distribution of funds. For the benefit of school districts in Livingston County. House bill to confer degrees in the Williamstown High School. A message was received from the Governor by Hon. C. E. Kincaid appointing H. B. Lyon, Wilhite Carpenter and J. M. Thomas the Building Committee of the Branch Penitentiary. Mr. Burnett from the Committee to Investigate Frauds in Elections, made a report, "that from the testimony they find that no candidate for any of the offices above mentioned, gave any money, or offered any bribe or money to procure his or her election, and that no member or members of this General Assembly received or accepted any money or bribe for his vote in said elections, nor was any money or bribe offered any member in consideration of his vote.

HOUSE—A message was received from the Governor, through the Assistant Secretary of State, H. M. McCarty, inclosing a report from the Auditor of Public Accounts:

There was in the Treasury at the close of business yesterday	$137,047 98
There is over due to charities	48,491 84
Leaving	$88,556 14

There is remaining unpaid by the Sheriffs only about $75,000. The expenditures for the remainder of the fiscal year will exceed considerably the receipts. The funding of the $500,000 due banks, lately authorized by the Legislature, would leave the State at the end of the fiscal year, June 30, with a very small deficit, but for the appropriations which have been made. There has been already appropriated over $250,000, counting the appropriation for flood sufferers at $40,000, which the expenditure will not exceed. Of these appropriations $200,000 were of an extraordinary character, and were not contemplated in the estimates for the year. There are yet before the Legislature bills appropriating considerable sums to certain charitable institutions. The appropriations of the whole session may be set down at $300,000. The pay of the Legislature will exceed the estimate $15,000. The school bill now pending provides that the School Fund shall have its proportionate share of all taxes derived from corporations. Heretofore this class of taxes has gone exclusively to the General Expenditure and Sinking Funds. Last year there was assessed against this class of property taxes to the amount of over $359,000. The proposed enactment would, therefore, take from the General Expenditure Fund about $170,000. It will be necessary, therefore, to provide for—

Appropriations, say	$300,000
Pay of Legislature in excess of estimates	15,000
Revenues withheld from General Expenditure Fund by school bill, if passed	170,000
Deficit	$485,000

If the contracts with C. R. Mason & Co., for convict labor should not be renewed after September next, there would be a largely increased expenditure on account of the penitentiary to be met in the next fiscal year. To meet this deficit I know of no measure before the Legislature, except one proposing to double the license now imposed upon the sale of spirituous and malt liquors. The revenue from that source amounted last year to a little over $100,000. It can not be expected that doubling the license will also double the revenue, but, should it have that effect it would put into the General Expenditure Fund only about $44,000, which would be the pro rata belonging to that fund. It will be impossible to proceed under the act directing the construction of another penitentiary, unless a tax is imposed for that purpose. An increase of five cents upon the present rate would be necessary to produce the $150,000 voted by that act. If assessed upon this year's revenue, it can not be collected and made available before next spring; hence but little could be done toward the work until next year. In any event, and without a tax for the purpose the act must remain, for the present, at least, a dead letter. Yours respectfully, FAYETTE HEWITT, Auditor.

FRANKFORT, May 9.—SENATE.—Among a large number of bills passed, the following are the most important: Incorporating the Maysville Mining Association, extending police authority at Louisville beyond the city limits, repealing the act incorporating the Mutual Friends' Association, incorporating the Ohio Bridge Company, amending the charter of the Central Passenger Railroad Company, incorporating the Ladies' Hebrew Benevolent Association, incorporating the Kentucky Insurance Company, to establish the South Covington Judicial District.

HOUSE.—The following bills were passed: Incorporating the Wendall Trotting Association, securing to Sheriffs and other officers the necessary expenses in carrying prisoners from one county to another, amending the charter of the Louisville Southern Railroad Company, increasing the pay of the chaplain of the penitentiary, increasing the rate of taxation, appropriating $25,000 for improvements at the asylum.

IN Livingston County, near Smithland, on the 9th, Dick Crouch shot and fatally wounded James Sullivan. The men were neighbors. Ill-feeling had existed between them because Crouch rented a piece of ground Sullivan wanted, and because the wives of the two men had indulged in a fight in which Mrs. Crouch had whipped Mrs. Sullivan. Sullivan found some of his stray stock in Crouch's field, and went to drive them out. Crouch told him to keep off his place, and Sullivan answered with a threat to kill him if he came near. Crouch went to arm himself. Soon returning, he found that Sullivan had assaulted his wife with a stick, she having gone into the field to ask him to leave. Crouch opened fire on Sullivan with a pistol, and he fell, shot twice. His physicians say he can not recover. Crouch gave himself up.

KENTUCKY DEMOCRACY.

Proceedings of the State Convention—Selection of Delegates to Chicago.

FRANKFORT, KY., May 7.—The Democratic State Convention, to select delegates to Chicago, July 8, met here to-day at twelve o'clock, with about 350 delegates present.

Col. J. Stoddard Johnston, Chairman of the State Central Committee, rapped the assemblage to order and was greeted with a round of cheers. He spoke as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION—It devolves upon me, as Chairman of the State Central Committee, to call this convention to order. In discharging this duty, permit me to welcome you to Frankfort, and to indulge the hope that your brief sojourn in our midst may not only redound to the good of the party which has summoned you, but that you may also bear away with you pleasant impressions of your visit to the State capital.

We have assembled, Democrats of Kentucky, to take the initial steps towards the nomination of a Presidential ticket, with which to confront the party in power, and to organize for victory in November. Nearly twenty-eight years have passed since Buchanan and Breckenridge were nominated at Cincinnati, the last Democratic nominees who have filled the offices of President and Vice President. For nearly a quarter of a century the Republican party has been in power, having, during one term, usurped the Executive functions which of right belongs to us, Rutherford B. Hayes having drawn the salary which rightly belonged to Samuel J. Tilden. Its corruptions, abuses of power, and the burdens which it still imposes upon the tax-payers of the country in the shape of a war tariff, have become so oppressive and intolerable that the best interests of the American people demand a change. It remains to be seen whether the representatives of the Democracy of all the States, who are to meet at Chicago on the 8th day of July, will have the wisdom to unite by their action the great army of Democratic voters, and thereby insure our success. I have faith in the people, and believe that the popular sense, acting through their delegates at Chicago, will yet heal all dissensions, and present to the common foe one solid line of patriots, inspired, as in 1876, with the high purpose of redeeming the country from misrule, and restoring it to untrammeled prosperity.

As the best means of contributing to that end, let it be the aim of this Convention, one of the first to meet under the call, to illustrate, by its harmony, unanimity of action, and devotion to Democratic principle, its fitness to furnish an example to the other States which are to follow.

Hon. Charles Offutt, of Bourbon, was elected temporary Chairman. Hon. Thos. H. Carruthers, of Newport, was elected temporary Secretary. Committees on Organization, Resolutions and Credentials were selected, and then the convention adjourned till 7 p. m.

At the evening session the Committee on Organization reported in favor of Hon. Boyd Winchester, of Louisville, for permanent Chairman, and T. P. Carruthers Secretary, and the report was adopted.

The following resolutions were adopted:

THE PLATFORM.

The Democracy of Kentucky, in Convention assembled, declare:

FIRST—We pledge ourselves anew to the constitutional doctrines and traditions of the Democratic party as illustrated by the teachings and example of a long line of Democratic statesmen and patriots, as embodied in the platforms of the National Democratic Conventions of 1876 and 1880.

SECOND.—We do especially renew our declarations of hostility to centralization, as that dangerous spirit of encroachment which tends to consolidate the powers of government, and thus to create in whatever form a real despotism, with all its subsidies to corporations and grants without consideration of the public property; and we again express our conviction of the urgent necessity of the general and thorough reform of the Civil Service.

THIRD—We do especially deny the right of the Government to surrender its taxing power to corporations or individuals, which is the result of both the theory and practice of the Republican party; and we denounce the present tariff, which burdens the people with excessive war taxes in time of peace, as a master-piece of injustice, inequality and false pretense. We arraign the Republican party as the creator and defender of a system which has impoverished many industries to subsidize a few; which has prohibited imports that might purchase the products of American labor, and degraded American commerce from the first to an inferior rank on the high seas; which has cut down the sales of American manufactures at home and abroad, and depleted the returns of the American Agriculture, an industry followed by half of our people. It costs the tax-payers five times more than it yields the Treasury; it promotes fraud, fosters smuggling, corrupts officials, enriches the few by forcing bounties from the many, and favors the dishonest, and to bankrupt honest merchants. We assert the doctrine of the Constitution, that all taxation shall be exclusively for revenue, and demand that no more revenue shall be collected than is required to meet the expenses and obligations of the Government economically administered.

Resolved, That, believing that no geographical line should exist in this country, as a test of eligibility to any office in the gift of the whole people, but that the standard of honesty, competency, fidelity and constitutional citizenship alone should prevail, Kentucky recommends to the Democracy of the Union for the Presidency of the United States him, whose elevation to the third office in the nation was the first step to the obliteration of the seam left by the late civil war; who was first to lead his own party back to its own national platform of steady approach toward the removal of obstructions to trade, the foremost exponent of all the living Democratic principles of to-day, Hon. John G. Carlisle.

The following named men were elected delegates to the National Democratic Convention for the State at large: Henry Watterson, Louisville; James A. McKenzie, Christian; J. Stoddard Johnston, Franklin; Thomas L. Jones, Campbell.

The following is a list of the district delegates:

First District—J. D. White, Ballard; R. A. Burnett, Trigg.

Second—Hunter Wood, Christain; W. D. Orr, Hopkins.

Third—W. B. Jefferson, Todd; William Owsley, sen.

One of the girls, seizing upon this cue to his character, proposed to him after the other had been left at her door and was accepted.

PERE MORAND died at Megreve, in Upper Savoy, the other day, leaving behind him fifteen children, sixty-five grand-children and thirty-one great grand-children. As an encouragement to others, it is said that the Government, who are aggrieved at the increasing depopulation of France compared with her neighbors, propose to present a medal to the family.

ST. LOUIS seems to have her share of murderers. Fourteen murder trials are on the docket for trial there.

THE legislature adjourned Monday, without passing a resolution censuring the people for asking so much insignificant legislation.

THE Republican party is having some trouble with its ins and its outs, while the Democrats have a tariff and anti tariff tail to their kite.

THERE is a split between the white and colored Republicans in Texas as well as in Georgia. The black man wants some of the offices.

L. C. NORMAN, of this county, and F. P. Helm, of Covington, will represent this Congressional district in the national convention at Chicago.

THE Republicans are busy figuring on the result of their national convention, and Blaine's being in the lead is very discomfeiting to the ins, who fear that they may suddenly become the outs.

Why don't they revive the Police Court, as it is needed very much?—Burlington Item in Commonwealth.

Don't see why the police court should be revived. The County Judge is a resident of the town, and a Justice of the Peace lives within a stone's throw. If the law can'not be enforced under these circumstances it would not be with a police lourt unsupported by other municipal offices.

AFTER greatly lamenting the tragic death of Charles Dickson, the Rising Sun Recorder finds the following indictment against Kentucky:

"It is such inexcusable lawlessness as this, that prevents emigration to Kentucky, and gives the State a bad name throughout the country, causing the tide of moving people to go by it and seek homes in a less desirable climate, where the natural advantages are far less than in Kentucky. It is the boast that eight negroes have been hanged on that same walnut tree."

We demurrer to the latter part of the indictment, it missing the number of negroes really "hanged on that same walnut tree," only six. But that is as close to the truth as some of the papers north of the Ohio river can come when attempting to give accounts of troubles in the South.

THOSE interested in the building of the Rabbit Hash and Gunpowder Pike will meet at Rabbit Hash next Saturday at 10 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of organizing the company and putting the enterprise in a tangible shape. The solicitors have met with much encouragement, and they are very sanguine of their plans being successful. Now is the time to push the matter, and the meeting should be largely attended by the citizens of the territory which will be traversed by the road when built. The land owners in the Gunpowder and Rabbit Hash neighborhoods are in dire need of a good pike, and they will stand in their own light unless they render the assistance to secure the building of the road. There is nothing in their power to do that will be of as much benefit to them as the building of the proposed road; its benefits will be permanent, and the road a perpetual monument to the enterprise of the present citizens of these neighborhoods. Let the approaching meeting be large, harmonious and a success in all its details.

THE board of tax supervisors, Messrs. S. P. Brady, Nat Hind and J. W. Duncan, commenced work on the Assessor's book for this year, Monday morning in the Court-house. These gentlemen will do the work as well as it can be done under the law which controls their operation, but it is impossible for them to do the work justice. There is over five millions of taxable property in the county, divided into about 3,800 lists, ranging from $25 to $40,000, and no three men in the county can, in three days, the time generally consumed by the labor, advisedly supervise these numerous lists. Again, we venture the assertion that there are not ten men in the whole county who know that the board is in session, who did not come in possession of the information by accident. But this is no fault of the supervisors, it is a lame place in the law. The work of the supervisors is only the comparing of their judgments with that of the Assessor, while the former sit in the Court-house to make their deductions, the latter being on or near the property when he made his valuation, which should better qualify him for the work. The supervisors sometimes discover errors which occur in transcribing the book, and this is a 1 they can change without summoning the listed person to appear before them to show cause why his list should not be increased. As no person is ever summoned before the board we presume no lists are raised, and as the Assessor is not apt to value property too high, it is fair to presume no lists are reduced, which confines the labors of the board to simply correcting clerical errors, which could be done in a much less expensive manner. The law under which tax supervisors act is a very poor one and should have been repealed long since.

Judging by the unanimity of views expressed by reports from the various tobacco sections, the crop set out this year will be far beyond all previous efforts, and if favorable weather prevails during the growing season, there is reason for believing that the prices of tobacco may be seriously affected next year if not before the end of this one. The ranks of tobacco growers have been swelled by the hundreds in every section section, large tracts of new land will be devoted to tobacco this year, and the old planters will grow to their full capacity. It is true that plants are somewhat backward in maturing, but this is due almost wholy to the lingering cold weather, and as the custom of canvasing plant beds has been commonly resorted to ample protection has been afforded plants, and a few days good, worm weather will advance them wonderfully, and fit them for transplanting. The planting has been so ample that there can hardly be any reason to fear a scarcity of plants.

The frequent shows and rains have thoroughly saturated the ground for some distance down, and it will take a long spell of drought to put plants in jeopardy. The general satisfaction at prices obtained for the last crop has enthused planters, both old and new recruits, and greater attention than usual will be given the growing crop.

Nothing, therefore, but the weather of the future is to be feared, to mar these exceedingly favorable prospects for a mammoth tobacco crop. This may or may not prove favorable, yet the chances are very favorable for ultimate good fortune. The increase of prosperity will not be confined to any one section, but will be general to all, though most noted in North Carolina and the White Burley belt of Kentucky.—Western Tobacco Journal, Cincinnati.

THE Democratic Convention, which met at Frankfort on the 7th inst., did its work up in a hurry. Boyd Winchester was selected permanent chairman, John G. Carlisle indorsed for President, and adopted the following platform:

First—We pledge ourselves anew to the constitutional doctrines and traditions of the Democratic party as illustrated by the teachings and examples of a long line of Democratic statesmen and patriots and embodied in the platforms of the National Democratic conventions of 1876 and 1880.

Second—We do especially renew our declaration of hostility to centralization and that dangerous spirit of encroachment which tends to consolidate the powers of government, and thus create, whatever the form, a real despotism, and to all subsidies to corporations, and grants without consideration of the public property, and we again express our conviction of the urgent necessity of a general and thorough reform of the civil service.

Third—And we do especially deny the right of the government to surrender its power to corporations or individuals, which is the result of both theory and the practice of the Republican party, and we denounce the present tariff, which burdens the people with excessive war taxes in time of peace, as a masterpiece in injustice, inequality and false pretense. We arraign the Republican party as the creator and defender of a system which has impoverished many industries to subsidize a few; which has prohibited imports that might purchase the products of American labor and degraded American commerce from the first to an inferior rank on the high seas; which has cut down the sales of American manufactures at home and abroad and depleted the returns of American agriculture and industry followed by half our people; it costs the tax-payers five times more than it gives to the Treasury; it upholds fraud, fosters smuggling, corrupt officials, enriches the few by forcing the bounties from many and enriches the dishonest and bankrupts the honest merchant. We assert the declaration of the Constitution that all taxation shall be exclusively for revenue, and we demand that no more revenue shall be collected than is required to meet the expenses of the obligations of the government economically administered.

Thos. L. Jones, Henry Watterson, J. Stoddard Johnston and J. A. McKenzie were chosen delegates at large for the State.

Nathan R. Steadman, a very highly respected citizen of Aurora, died suddeuly of heart disease, Monday.

The Standard Bred Trotting Stallion
MAMBRINO
ABDALLAH,

Will make the coming season at Hogan Grove Farm, 3 miles north of Williamstown, Grant county, Ky., near the Dry Ridge Depot, C. S. R. R.

At $20 to Insure.

DESCRIPTION AND PEDIGREE.

Mambrino Abdallah is a bay stallion 15¾ hands, foaled 1873. Bred by L. Herr, proprietor Forrest Park Breeding Farm, Lexington, Ky., by Mambrino Patchen.

First dam, Lady Ayers, by Redmon's Abdallah Patchen. Second dam Lady Abdallah (dam of Granville, 2:26) by Alexander's Abdallah.

Mambrino Patchen (full brother to Lady Thorn, 2:18¼), by Mambrino Chief; dam by Gano, son of American Eclipse; second dam by son of Sir William, by Sir Archy.

Redmon's Abdallah Patchen, got by Alexander's Abdallah (sire of Goldsmith Maid 2:14), son of Rysdyk's Hambletonian; dam Lady Valentine, by Redmond's Valentine son of Imp. Valentine; 2d dam by Shakspeare; 3d dam by Potomac; 4th dam by Blackburn's Whip, son of Imp. Whip.

Alexander's Abdallah (sire of Goldsmith Maid, 2:14) got by Rysdyk's Hambletonian; dam Katie Darling by Bay Roman.

Mambrino Patchen, sire of Mambrino Abdallah leads all other living horses in number of grandchildren that have beaten 2:30, and the average speed is faster. Mambrino Patchen leads in number and speed having 8 sons and 7 daughters that have produced 16 trotters in 2:30 and under. Wilkes Boy 2 years old, record 2:30¼, is also out of a Mambrino Patchen mare, and Ike Marvel record 2:30¼, is by a son of Mambrino Patchen.

Mambrino Abdallah's colts are nearly all bay. He is good in all points, great substance and stamina, and was the fastest natural trotter at even 12 months old I ever saw, and I priced him then at $5,000, and not a cent less would have bought him at that time. He is a sure and first-class breeder. I have sold a number of his colts at yearlings for $500 each. I sold a filly at 18 months old for $1,000, and a colt coming 3 years old for $1,200, and a four-year-old for $1,500. He is kindly disposed in or out of harness, and one of the most popular horses in the country to-day

Lady Ayers (the dam of Mambrino Abdallah) is the dam of Tillie Thorn, who can trot better than 2:30. She is also the dam of Thorn Boy, a colt I sold a few days since at the age of of 18 months for $1,200. Every colt Lady Ayers has ever produced I have sold for $500, and upwards.

Mambrino Abdallah breeds as fine colts as any horse living, and his colts show extra action, extra size, and always command good prices. Yours Truly, L. HERR.

The undersigned state that we know the horse Mambrino Abdallah, now in control of O. P. Hogan, jun., have examined his colts, and cheerfully recommend this horse to breeders as one of the best in Kentucky W. W. Adams, Mammoth sale stable, Lexington; J. T. Nichols Com. dealer in live stock Lexington; Isaac Smith, Lessee of Fair grounds, Lexington Ky.; S. A. Coons, Former Prop. Georgetown stable; R. H. Willis, Sale stable, Cynthiana; D. S. McFarland, Vet'y. surgeon, Lexington; Rowland & Broadwell, Sale stable, 68 E. Short Street.

Posture, $1 50 per month, no responsibility for accidents or escapes.

If you want to buy a cheap fly net or lap duster, call on A. M. Acra, Burlington.

Neither of the delegates from this district showed up in the State conventiou at Frankfort, last week.

The negroes talk of organizing a mob to destroy the tree on which Williams and Dickson were hung.

W. A. Murphy and family are now residents of our town, having moved here last week, from Walton.

Dudley Rouse is giving his house a thorough spring renovating. It is now in the hands of the painters.

Two blacksmiths were at work on the jail one day last week, and it is now ready to let more prisoners escape.

Mrs. J. Q. Elstun, of near Union, and Mrs. W. F. Ashburn, of Cincinnati, are visiting their sister, Mrs. Lillie Hall.

Geo. A. Craft, of Indiana, a friend of D. M. Hewitt, was canvassing this section in the interest of a book, last week.

Had the large lock on the outer jail door been in repair, the mob would have had a happy time getting their victim out.

Mack Aylor has had the misfortune to lose his dun horse, a very valuable animal, since he moved to Lawrenceburg.

F. Riddell and H. P. Stephens have formed a partnership for the practice of law. The firm is styled Riddell and Stephens.

Jim Conner has been engaged in an extensive distribution, the past week, but not under a lottery franchise. His was wool sacks.

Mittie Acra went to town Saturday morning, bought a bill of goods and returned with them before noon. He has no use for a telephone.

Burlington is now robed in its summer beauty, and the citizens are adding to nature's work by the artistic use of the whitewash brush.

The fellow who settled himself on a coil of barbed wire in front of Rouse's store, last Saturday, thought he had struck a bumble bees' nest.

If you have a watch or clock tha needs repairing, or if you want to buy fine jewelry go to M. C. Motch, Jeweler, N. W. Cor. Madison and Pike Strs.

Keene Robbins is vice-president and exofficio secretary of the fishing club, and, on application, will furnish the members cork-holders, fully equipped.

There is something the matter with the colored congregation which heretofore congregated at St. George's Chapel. They have not congregated for some time.

Judge Dills has planted a great many maple trees about his premises, which, if they thrive, will add much to the beauty thereof.

The wool market has not been very satisfactory to the producers this season, the best sales being no higher than 22 cents a pound, while it has ranged as low as 18 cents.

County Clerk Garnett is preparing to devote his attention to the compilation of the assessor's book as soon as that officer provides him with the material to work on.

W. E. Piper's business has expanded till it demands more room than he now has and he is negotiating with Mrs. Green for the former store rooms in the Central Hotel building.

Dudley Rouse has a miniature aquarium in his store about which there'd be nothing unusual were it not that he discovered the other day that the contents are a Canadian variety.

This is house-cleaning season with all its demoralizing accompaniaments. It is evident that when man was allotted his three score and ten years that the house-cleaning season was overlooked.

Two old and decrepit, colored inmates of the Poor-house went fishing one Saturday evening not long since, and getting lost wandered about all night in a rain, and were found in town early on Sunday morning completely bewildered

We have yet to hear the first man say that the jail is good enough; but will those, who are now so free with their denunciations, if called upon to pay a tax to build a better one come down with the money without objecting? Ah, there's the rub!

Our local M. D's, who spent Sunday week putting their dissecting knives in order for using on the "point" which was found suspended by the road side that morning, were somewhat chagrined when they discovered that some other would-be anatomist had appropriated the carcass.

Floods come and go, but we continue to do business at our old stand in Lawrenceburg, Indiana, and those wanting tombstones or monuments will find our prices and designs most satisfactory. John Beall, of Hebron, is our agent in Boone county. Hurschart & Co., Lawrenceburg, Ind.

Charles Pope we are glad to report better, and any evidence of poison has been entirely disapproved by scientific investigation.

Our handsome and gallant deputy postmaster is not given to making mistakes under ordinary circumstances, but when requested by a young lady to address a letter to a young lady friend, our advice to her is to read the superscription, for he has been known to write the wrong name.

The sheriff's delinquent poll-tax list for 1883 contains the names of 519 persons. The list was sold publicly in the Court-house by county attorney Tolin last court day, by districts, bringing in the aggregate, $44. Some of the district lists sold as low as $1, and no doubt the purchasers will lose money on them at that price.

Mrs. Dudley Rouse and her sister, Miss Nellie Blythe, visited Mrs. Richard White Monday, and on their return, their horse backed the buggy over a bank, breaking the shafts and frightening the ladies pretty badly but not hurting them, although Miss Nellie, in her fright, fell under and was run over by the buggy.

Dr. Bange's fishing club held a meeting down on Gunpowder a few days since, and those of the members who escaped a soaking from falling into the creek, were thoroughly wet by a heavy rain, and when they dragged their weary limbs into town in the evening, they were wet, muddy, cross and hungry, with but one poor, little bass as a result of their labors.

A black boy named Dickson was taken from the Boone county jail Saturday night by a mob and hung. He was charged with theft and a general bad character. He is the eighth "nigger" that has been hung in Boone county since 1876. They must be a great deal worse than the white men over there. Perhaps, however, the whites want them to be angels.—Lawrenceburg Press.

He would make a good fallen angel.

Last week Dr. DeBeck, of Cincinnati, Dr. Galespie, of Rising Sun, and Dr. Furnish, of this place, performed a very delicate operation on Dr. Cowen's wife, at her father's just below Rabbit Hash. Mrs. Cowen had an abscess form in her head behind the ear, which, if allowed to break inwardly, was sure to produce death, and the above named doctors removed a portion of the scull just behind the ear and allowed the accumulations to escape. It took about two and one-half hours to perform the operation, and at the last accounts the patient was doing as well as could be expected.

The Bullittsville Dancing Club gave a hop in the Morgan Academy, this place, last Friday night. The Hall was thronged with youth and beauty, principally from the north end of the county, and the dancing was continued till near daylight, when the assemblage dispersed, having spent a night in rare enjoyment long to be remembered by the lovers of the dance. The Bullittsville Club is composed of members who received instructions under Prof. H. M. Piper, and Friday night's hop was the first given by that club.

Among the distinguished persons present were Col. Edgar Cropper with plow shoes at half mast and hair banged.

Judge R. A. Brady from the quiet precincts of Middle Creek, with a bland smile—crimped.

A. S. Gaines with cowhide cravat, and lamb skin vest, with low neck and short sleeves.

C. L. Crisler, who danced the racquet and other modern dances with a grace and ease that was a cyclone of astonishment to the boys.

Miss Carrie Riggs is visiting friends near Florence this week.

Mrs. J. C. Jenkins is quite poorly at this writing.

Beaver Lick.

MAY 5.—Last Sabbath was a day long to be remembered by those who note the history of the Baptist church in Beaver. On that day Messrs. John S. Johnson and William Griffith were, by Rev. Lafe Johnson and many visiting deacons of churches of the same faith, ordained deacons of the Baptist church in Beaver. A large congregation was present, and a basket dinner prepared by the good housewives of Beaver and spread in the churchyard, was a feature of the occasion greatly enjoyed. Mrs. Adeline Taylor's letter from the New Bethel church was accepted and she received into full fellowship on that day, at the Beaver church.

"Gas Ometer" asks for the origin of "Give 'em Goss." Well, when George Sleet was sheriff of Boone county, Allen and Goss had a little "mill" near Walton, and George was on hand to command the peace. George was requested (?) by the mob to be quiet; he did so, and saw the fight. He claimed the fight for Allen, but Goss' friends declared him the winner. Hence, George's phrase "give 'em goss," originated then and there, and signifies giving men what they don't rightfully merit. "Gas Ometer" will perceive that the phrase is of ancient origin, and full of modern significance.

Mr. Frank Gullion, of Big Bone Springs, came near losing a very fine colt recently. The little animal came in contact with a new wire fence, and was nearly killed by the barbed wires. People of that neighborhood are beginning to look on barbed wire fence as more of a nuisance than a real benefit.

Our merchants have laid in a full stock of spring goods, and the good old farmers are taking it off their hands right along. We owe it all to "terbacker."

Our farmers all report a favorable prospect for tobacco plants. All things favorable, there will be largest acreage set in tobacco ever grown in this vicinity.

There is talk in Beaver, at present, of building a Reformed, Campbellite or Christian church here as soon as the necessary subscription can be obtained.

Beaver now boasts of two blacksmith shops, both running and turning out good work.

[This communication came in too late for last week.—EDS.]

Florence.

It has been a matter of great wonder and much speculation for some time with the citizens of Florence in regard to the scarcity and high prices of eggs in our market, but this mystery has at length been satisfactorily explained. It is now understood that our neighbor and worthy proprietor of Erlanger, Mr. John L. Conner, who is ever ready to minister to the wants and comfort of his guests, gets his supplies from Florence and having the patronage of some half dozen customers from Burlington, viz: Conner & Sleet, James Westbay & Son, Cy Crisler and Tom Finch, all of whom have a kind of egg-eating distemper and universally stop at the above station to appease their appetites. Eggs are now brought into requisition and served in every conceivable shape, eggs fried and poached, scalloped and scrabbled, boiled and roasted, done aud rare, and the amount consumed is simply enormous. We have no particular objections to this, only the high prices we have to pay here from the drainage on our stock. If our neighbors at Burlington would get a lot of layers, such as Leghorns, Plymmoth Rock, &c., it might relieve us some.

A suit styled the Town of Florence vs. M. Clutterbuck and which is exciting much interest has been instituted here. This is a case to test the right of the trustees of the town to rent teachers the house known as the Town Hall, and which was deeded for schools and meeting purposes. The case was called the first Saturday of the month in the Police Court, but was dismissed by failure the town to appear by attorney. The suit has been renewed in Esquire Wagstaff's court, which convenes the 2d Saturday in June. L. Conner Yager represents the defense. Much anxiety is manifested as an adverse decision to the town would subject her to a disgorging of moneys illegally collected of teachers.

The weddings still go on and the weather is stormy. On Tuesday the 6th as was announced, the wedding of Mr. Thomas Dorsey, of Boone to Miss Hale, of Kenton, was celebrated at the Catholic church, Father Burke officiating in his usual good style. I am unable to particularize as to dress, &c., not being present, but a glance at an elegant train of hacks and carriages, in one of which we caught a glimpse of a blushing bride in rich attire, with a smiling groom, donned in fashion, at her side, convinced us that they were a happy couple.

Frank E. Souther has just completed a hole in the ground, called the cyclone protector. We think the thing will work unless the storm comes from the south, in which event it will need a reversible attachment.

Mrs. Catharine Bryant, of Covington, has been visiting her mother, Mrs. Lucy A. Clore, and her sister, Mrs. Eudora Kyle.

Croquet every Saturday afternoon by Prof. Stephenson, Dr. Sayre, Pap Clore and ladies to make up the game.

Attorneys Stephens and Tolin honored us with their presence a few moments, last Saturday.

The County Clerk has received a copy of the new law regulating the sale of whisky, &c. The tax on a license to keep a tavern is $10; if with the privilege to retail vinous or malt liquors, $50, if with privilege to retail spirituous, or spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors, $100. Coffee house license, $50. On a merchant or druggist to sell vinous or malt liquors, $50; to sell spirituous liquors, or spirituous, vinous and malt liquors, $100; no license tax shall be required of a druggist who sells liquor for exclusively medical purposes.

HOW WILL YOU THINK OF ME?

Oh! how will you think of me, love,
When you are far away,
And what will your fancies be, love,
What will you think or say?
Will you think of me as a bird, love?
And ask, "Is she sitting alone,
With warbling hushed and wearied wings,
While the winds of the autumn moan?"

Or will you think of a flower, love,
That blooms in a garden gay,
But is drooping hour by hour, love,
In the heat of the summer day?
No soft south wind comes wooing there
In whispers tender and free,
And say, "My own true love doth fare
Like this for the want of me."

Will you think of me as a star, love,
That's shining pale afar,
While looking off to the purpling west,
While the day's last glories are,
Hiding away in a cloud, and will
Not shine for love of the sun?
Will you say, "Such is the grieving still
Of my love when I am gone?"

Or will it be as a vine, love,
That falls neglected down
And reaches her clinging tendrils out
For something to twine upon?
And searches away until she finds
The sturdy old oak tree,
And say, "So doth my true love wait
With open arms for me."

Think not of me as these, love,
They change with sun or shower;
The bird for another will sing its song,
The rain will woo the flower:
The stars will shine when the clouds are gone,
The vine wreath a stone or a tree;
But say: "She waits with her woman's heart
And her deathless love for me."

MEMORY.

There is no faculty of the mind so wonderful and mysterious as memory. The ancients called it the mother of the muses and the fountain of thought, and held that the term "creative minds" is a mere figure of speech, for men only select and combine. Memory is the mainspring of thought, for thought is but the comparison between experience and remembrance. It may, like muscular force, exist without any other faculty being especially developed, and be carried to such perfection as to seem supernatural. It is held by some that the process of remembering all things, small and great, is injurious, since there is always so much that is neither helpful nor nutritious. But it is absolute that he who is successful in literature, law, medicine, politics, the ministry, or in anything that wins fame and name, must have, does have, a fine memory for a foundation.

Montaigne says with wisdom that to know by heart is not to know. Certainly there are those who after one or two readings can repeat whole chapters, or long poems, word for word, and yet who comprehend not the smallest part of the matter memorized. There are others, again, who, although unable to recall a word, will yet comprehend and remember the full meaning. There are others still who combine both. They are apt to develop into literary machines, in whom all originality of thought and feeling is lost. As memory varies in degree so it varies in kind, belonging to one or the other of two great classes: memory of sense and memory of reason. Henry Clay seldom forgot a face, but could never repeat or recall a line of anything he read. A metaphysician of celebrity would remember every word or point in an argument, but invariably forgot names in whatever connection used. A gentleman prominent in belles-lettres had no sort of memory for dates, even forgetting the date of his own and his children's birth, yet he perfectly remembered everything else, while his brother had a memory only for dates, and was never known to forget one.

There are persons who read so much and so rapidly that they have no time to remember, and so it happens often that although witty and obliging in conversation, they relate things, historical and literary, so vaguely and incompletely that they annoy rather than instruct or entertain. In grasping or conquering knowledge of any kind, time is the all important factor, else the new ideas that come to us can not be joined to or harmonized with those already in our mind, or in use. This rapid readers seldom realize, although occasionally you meet a person peculiarly gifted, who will comprehend as rapidly as he reads. It is often wise to forget. Say, in the introduction to his Political Economy, says that he studied "all books relating to this theme, and then took time to forget what he read before beginning to write."

Memory is capricious, by turns kind and full of malice, forcing us to remember much that is painful or sorrowful, to the exclusion, sometimes, of happier themes; for as Cicero says, some sorrows are mellowed by age, while others grow keener day by day, as one thinks of the misery of the present, and looks back on the days that are past. This thought, by the way, anticipates and perhaps suggested Dante's idea afterward expressed by Tennyson in Lockley Hall: "A sorrow's crown of sorrows is remembering happier things."

The "unsound majority" claim that memory treasures more readily that which is pleasing than that which is painful. All the happy events of our lives, sweet sounds, grand music, beautiful pictures, fine scenery, and eloquent oratory are remembered, while discordant sounds, unpleasant scenes and incidents and unhappy events are forgotten or remembered but vaguely. Yet it would seem that a great deal depends upon one's present condition. Perhaps, too, if past sorrows were remembered more acutely, present sorrows might seem by comparison less cruel and less like burdens.

Memory with some people is what oratory was with Artemus Ward; he had it but it was "never about him when wanted." Who has not suffered intense mortification through some caprice of memory, and at the most exciting part of the story, just where the "point comes in" been forced to halt because memory proves faithless? It is told of Charles James Fox that in an interesting discussion he forgot the name of a town, and its remembrance being important, in his vain attempts to recall it the discussion was abruptly ended. An hour later at dinner he startled his guests by suddenly exclaiming "Gorcum! Gorcum!" which was the forgotten name. This freak or phenomenon of memory is familiar to all, as also that one which leads persons to tell you the same pet joke or story every time they meet you. It is told of an English minister that he preached one Sunday from the same pulpit the same sermon he preached the Sunday before, gave out the same hymns, read the same lessons, made the same extempore prayer and had not the slightest recollection of the repetition. One of the most amusing freaks of this sort memory once played upon an author of celebrity; he wrote a learned and vigorous treatise in defense of a certain theory, and some years after, upon reading it, instantly wrote one quite as vigorous in refutation, taking each well advanced argument in turn. He had completely forgotten that he was the original author, and gloried in what he thought his opponent's defeat. Dr. Broussonet had a severe attack of apoplexy. After his recovery he could not remember a name or a noun, but adjectives multiplied and abounded in his brain. A gentleman who was a thorough Greek scholar was thrown from his horse, and afterward could recall no word of his beloved Greek. Another man was kicked over the left eye by a horse and forgot his Latin. The question is an interesting one as to what would have been the result if he had been kicked over the right eye. But if memory can be knocked out she can also be knocked in. The poet Moore, whose "songs are sung in every land and every tongue," was once riding in company with a brother poet over exceedingly rough roads. In one place they were suddenly jostled and thrown off the seat with such force as to cause them to strike their heads severely against the top of the cab. Moore, rubbing the rapidly swelling spot, said: "There, that knocked a word in my head that I have been hunting for six months; now I can finish my poem."

Among the most remarkable phenomena of memory is that of a young woman who, lying on a bed of sickness, repeated one Latin poem after another with astonishing correctness. Not having studied Latin her friends could not account for it, and upon investigation learned that many years before she lived in the house where also lived a fine Latin scholar, and she heard him daily repeating the poems that she did not notice or remember at the time, but that long after came back so strangely. Another is recorded of a gentleman, that during convalescence from a spell of sickness, talked in a language unknown to his friends or family, and which was discovered to be the purest Spanish. Inquiry revealed the fact that when a child he lived in Spain and knew no language but Spanish. He left that sunny land, and had completely forgotten the language until the perfect rest of body and mind that accompanies convalescence recalled it. Ministers who hear death-bed confessions relate how the minds of men who have lived lives of sin and wickedness go back to the days of childhood, when at a mother's side they learned some simple prayer or passage from the Bible. Goethe gives an exquisitely beautiful description of his memory in "Mignon," where the scenes of her childhood come back when she takes in her hand the little book from which she learned her prayers at her mother's knee.

Indeed, it may be said that nothing that is ever heard is forgotten; that certain scenes or things would recall every event or words, but the mind retains most vividly those impressions that are deepest, and generally, if the judgment be clear and good, beneficial.

An instance in point is that of the death-bed scene of Falstaff, as related by his dissolute companions. One of them says, that "when he saw a fly on Bardolph's nose, he thought it was a black soul burning in hell." Dame Quickly says that when she heard him babble of flowing waters she knew that he must die. By the "waters" she refers to that beautiful passage, "Thou leadest me by still waters." Falstaff's life was one of dissipation and gluttony, a craven and a braggart, a drunkard, a blasphemer, a gambler, a sponge, and skilled in the practice of all the vices of his time. Shakespere intended to convey the idea of the Christian influences of childhood, that not all of a long life of dissipation and godlessness can ever efface.

We would have little, perhaps no knowledge of the past but for the extraordinary memory of some men. The Bible was for some time handed down orally. The twenty-four books of Homer were thus preserved to us. The literature of all lands was memorized and handed down from father to son, until the invention of writing and writing materials. The library of one of the Kings of India required in its care one hundred Brahmins; one thousand dromedaries were necessary to convey it from place to place, and twenty years were consumed in condensing it into an encyclopædia of 12,000 volumes. The greater part of this had been memorized and handed down. So with the vast literature of China. Cyrus knew the name of every soldier in his army. The Emperor Hadrian could repeat two thousand words in the order given after one hearing or reading, and Seneca performed marvelous feats of memory. Pascal, whom Locke called that prodigy of parts, could repeat every word of the Bible, or of any book he read carefully. Milton was noted for his power of memory, and knew all of Homer. At the Court of Frederick the Great was an Englishman possessed of prodigious memory. Concealed by Frederick behind a screen he heard Voltaire read to the King one of his long poems. Imagine the fiery Frenchman's astonishment and righteous wrath, when, upon meeting the Englishman soon after he claimed the poem, and in support of his claim recited the poem entire.

Porson, the most learned Englishman known, never forgot. He knew not only every word of Æschlus, Sophocles, Euripides, and many other Greek and Latin authors, but could tell instantly where in their works certain words could be found, in what sentence of the paragraph, what paragraph, on what part of the page. Nor was it possible to bewilder him.

Macaulay's memory was extraordinary naturally, and was so carefully trained and cultivated that it became simple and easy to remember, and indeed almost impossible to forget. When but a child, when with his father making a call, while the elder people were talking he entertained himself by reading Scott's "Lay of the Last Minstrel," which was lying on a table. On his return home he recited as many cantos to his mother as she had the patience or time to listen to. He once said that if by any species of vandalism "Pilgrim's Progress" and "Paradise Lost" should be destroyed, he would undertake to reproduce them exactly from memory. Carlyle's memory was equally as tenacious.

When Mozart was but fourteen years of age he heard the beautiful Miserere, at the Sistine Chapel, at Rome. He determined to make himself master of it. He seated himself in a corner of the chapel and listened attentively, then went home, wrote it down and sung it at a concert the next day. Rome was electrified, for the copying of the music had been strictly forbidden. The Pope, hearing of it, asked to have the musical prodigy presented to him. But for this tax imposed on that most delicate and sensitive organ, the ear, Mozart afterwards paid in keenest suffering, and Beethoven, for similar conduct, paid nature the forfeit of incurable deafness. But Johnson could not only repeat every word he wrote, but every word he read. The story of Magliabecci, the Florentine librarian, and the request of the French Duke is well known to every one. Magliabecci was called a "universal index, both of titles and matter." Scott and Dr. Johnson were also famous for great memory.

Great lawyers, according to a certain close observer, recollect principles only; exact lawyers, cases, and can repeat decisions by the hour in the very words of the book. The former, says this observer, make the best advocates; the latter the best judges.

While all things prove the necessity for memory to be exercised in the education of people, before reason and fancy can be brought forth; such marvels of memory as herein related are uncommon. They are gifts. Yet any one may cultivate the memory to a certain degree of faithfulness and accuracy and by obeying certain laws, and following certain rules—for this like everything else is governed by laws—may remember as tenaciously as Hamlet promised to remember the ghost: "as long as memory holds a place in this distracted globe."

Emerson very well says that there are some things any one can remember. By this he means, most likely, debts, taxes, gas bills, injuries and insults, and which disproves the assertions of those who insist that memory, "the fond deceiver," treasures only the pleasurable. One most remarkable thing is that even those who claim every accomplishment and virtue in the decalogue will plead guilty to defective memory. To all such we point out the excellent advice and rules of Thomas Fuller:

"First influx thy mind with what thou desirest to remember. Overburden not thy memory to make so faithful a servant a slave. Have as much reason as a camel, to rise when thou hast thy full load. Memory is like a purse, if it be so overloaded that it can not shut, all will drop out. Above all, marshal thy notions into a handsome method."—Cleveland Leader.

Phenomenal Ignorance.

It is very interesting to trace the groveling operations of the native mind here, an exercise which can only be conducted with a knowledge of that mongrel union of Bengalee and Hindostanee, which the people call a language here, or the aid of an interpreter. The revelations of ignorance are so amazing sometimes that you wonder how any mind can entertain such preposterous notions. Here is a sample conversation which I had interpreted to me by a citizen the other day:

Number 1—"The English, you know, have an alphabet."

Number 2—"Indeed?"

Number 1—"Yes; and it is constructed on the same general principle of ours, though, of course, not so good a one. Well, I was going to speak about this telegraph arrangement that the English have, and of which they make so much. You know how it's operated, I suppose."

"No."

"No? You don't mean to say so! Why, it's all very simple when you stop to look at it for a moment. I know all about it. You see, first there's a tiny wire, terminating in twenty-six points at each end, one for each letter in the English alphabet. Over this wire are wrapped twelve successive layers of paper. Then comes a layer of silk, and finally two more layers of paper. This cable floats on the surface of the water, and when the operator in England spells out a word on the points at his end, the points at this end respond so as to move buttons upon which the respective letters in the alphabet are printed. Isn't that easy?"

"O my, yes."

"You know this end of the cable comes in at Bombay, but somehow it's all heard in Calcutta just the same. Have you traveled much?"

"Only a very little."

"Indeed? Poor thing! Why, I've been to every place of importance on the globe. I haven't been to New York yet, but then it's all a jungle there. But you really ought to go and see Bombay. Calcutta is nowhere. All the buildings are nine or ten stories high in Bombay, and the people have to be raised to the top by means of ropes and derricks. It wouldn't be safe to build stairs. There are three buildings there which are twelve stories high, and when the people get up to the top it is altogether impossible to see them. When they get about half way up they look like dolls."

Can you conceive any ignorance more exasperatingly dense? And yet this is a verbatim report of what was actually said, and only a moiety of what was said in the conversation referred to.—Calcutta. Cor Cleveland Herald.

A Muscular M. D.

There was a very good story in the papers of the day of a joke which was played by old Dr. Caldwell, formerly of the University of North Carolina.

The old doctor was a small man, and lean, but as hard and angular as the most irregular of pine knots.

He looked as if he might be tough, but he did not seem strong. Nevertheless he was, among the knowing ones, reputed to be as agile as "a cat," and in addition, was by no means deficient in knowledge of the "noble science of self-defense." Besides, he was cool as a cucumber. Well, in the freshman class of a certain year was a burly beef mountaineer of eighteen or nineteen. This genius conceived a great contempt for old Bolus' physical dimensions, and his soul was horrified that one so deficient in muscle should be so potential in his rule.

Poor Jones—that's what's we'll call him—had no idea of moral force. At any rate he was not inclined to knock under, and be controlled despotically by a man he imagined he could tie and whip. He at length determined to give the gentleman a genteel thrashing some night on the college campus, pretending to mistake him for some fellow-student.

Shortly after, on a dark and rainy night, Jones met the doctor crossing the campus. Walking up to him abruptly:

"Hello, Smith, you rascal—is this you?"

And with that he struck the old gentleman a blow on the side of the face that nearly felled him.

Old Bolus said nothing, but squared himself, and at it they went. Jones' youth, weight and muscle made him an "ugly customer," but after a minute or two the doctor's science began to tell, and in a short time he had knocked his beefy antagonist down and was astraddle his chest, with one hand on his throat, and the other dealing vigorous cuffs on the side of his head.

"Ah! stop! I beg pardon, doctor!—Dr. Caldwell—a mistake—for heaven's sake, doctor!" groaned Jones, who thought he was about to be eaten up—"I—I really thought it was Smith." The doctor replied with a word and a blow alternately:

"It makes no difference; for present purposes consider me Smith."

And it is said that old Bolus gave Jones such a pounding, then and there, as probably prevented his ever making another mistake as to personal identity, at least on the college campus.—Exchange.

The Tobacco Industry.

The tobacco industry of South Carolina, which, more than a century ago, was represented by an annual export of 8,000 hogsheads from the port of Charleston, but which long ago dwindled away to nothing, is likely to be revived to its former proportions within a few years. The South Carolina planters have been interested by the results of tobacco-growing in North Carolina, whose yellow tobacco belt yields profits as high in some instances, as $350 an acre, and there is a pretty large area of South Carolina soil which will henceforth be devoted to the weed, in preference to cotton. Tobacco is what the planters term a "cash crop," and, as South Carolina is well adapted to its production, an important change in her agricultural industries seems to be only a matter of time. The same may be said of Georgia. It is surprising that our planters have so long neglected this great staple, which is ever profitable to the farmers of Pennsylvania and Connecticut.—Savannah Times.

Her Off Day.

Yesterday forenoon a colored man called at a house on Sibley street and rang the bell, and as it was answerd he asked:

"Has you ... 'd lady doin' yer washin' dis mawnin'?"

"No, sir," was the reply. "I don't employ colored ladies to wash for me."

He went away in a puzzle, and returned in a few minutes and said:

"I reckon I made a bit of a mistake. Has you an ole black woman washin fur you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Named Lindy Tibbites?"

"Yes, that's her name."

"Den I'd like to spoke to her. I dun forgot dat she's a washwoman on Monday's an' a cull'd lady de odder six days in de week, an' dat's whar' de mistake come in. Please, kin I spoke wid yer ole black woman?"

He was permitted to "spoke."—Detroit Free Press.

—A female child was born in a county jail in New York one day recently, which is among the smallest bits of humanity ever seen. She measured thirteen inches from her crown to the sole of her tiny foot, tipping the scale at two pounds. Her hands are about an inch in length, and can be completely covered out of sight with a fifty-cent coin.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

—A new use has been found for sawdust by employing it, under a recent patent, as a substitute for sand in house plastering. It is claimed to be cheaper, lighter, warmer, more porous, and by its non-conducting qualities causing the inner surface of the walls to retain the heat which sand plastering allows to escape.

Important Trade-Mark Injunction in England.

A London telegram of May 5th says: "In the suit of the Charles A. Vogeler Company, of Baltimore, against Parrott & Co., of this city, the Court of Appeals has granted the plaintiffs a perpetual injunction, with costs. The action, which grew out of an alleged infringement of plaintiff's well-known trade-mark, St. Jacob's Oil, was originally heard in the High Court of Justice where Vice Chancellor Bacon, without going into the merits of the case, considered it was one that should go before the Comptroller of trade-marks. From this opinion the Vogeler Company appealed, claiming that they were being injured by the goods of the defendants, entitled St. David's Oil, being mistaken for theirs, and that while they had taken steps to bring a case before the Comptroller of trade-marks, months would elapse before a decision could be obtained, and as their business would be seriously injured by such delay, a restraining order should be granted at once. The result of the appeal was that a perpetual injunction was made, with costs. The proceedings before the Comptroller have been abandoned by the defendants, and the Baltimore house has thus achieved a double victory. By the order of the Court of Appeal, Parrott & Co. and their agents are perpetually restrained from using the term St. David's Oil, or any similar term, as well as the words 'The Great German Remedy,' and any words or marks similar to those used by the Vogeler Company in connection with their St. Jacob's Oil. The progress of this suit has been watched with interest by the mercantile and manufacturing community of Great Britain, where thousands of trade-marks of almost incalculable value are owned. It was shown by the evidence that plaintiffs had sold during the past few years over seven million bottles of St. Jacob's Oil, and expended as high as five hundred thousand dollars in a single year for advertising throughout the world. Their success in this suit is regarded with great satisfaction in business circles. Eminent English and American legal talent figured in the case. The counsel for the Vogeler Co., of which latter Mr. H. D. Umbstaetter was personally present, were Queen's Counsel Theodore Aston, John Cutler and Theodore MacKenna, of London; Rowland Cox, of New York, and General William Henry Browne, of Washington."

CURE OF COLD ON THE LUNGS.

Letter From Cyrus W. Field, Jr.

8 EAST 56TH STREET,
NEW YORK, May 8th, 1883.

Several times this winter I have suffered from severe Colds on my Lungs. Each time I have applied ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS, and in every instance I have been quickly relieved by applying one across my chest and one on my back. My friends, through my advice, have tried the experiment and also found it most successful. I feel that I can recommend them most highly to any one who may see fit to try them. CYRUS W. FIELD, JR.

EMINENT MEDICAL TESTIMONY.

19 EAST 32D STREET,
NEW YORK, March 15th, 1883.

I have used ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS in my practice with remarkable success, and found them peculiarly efficacious, when applied to the back, for Weak Spine and Nervous Exhaustion. They afford almost instant relief in Coughs, Colds and Liver Complaint. I cordially recommend them as the best and safest Plaster ever made, and would caution the public against the numerous other so-called Porous Plasters that are sought to be palmed off on a credulous public; they are worthless and oftentimes dangerous.

ROBERT S. NEWTON, M. D., L. R. C. S.

Weak Back, Rheumatism and all Local Pains are relieved and cured by ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS. One trial will convince you, but see that you get the genuine, as all other so-called Porous Plasters, without a single exception, are worthless imitations.

A LADY, who suffered from weakness peculiar to her sex, in writing to a friend, said: "I tried various kidney medicines, but only found myself growing worse. A friend told me to use Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. Its effect on me was soon indicated by a clear and beautiful complexion, a freedom from aches and pains, a complete removal of nervous depression, painless regularity in habits of digestion and otherwise. I can not praise the remedy too highly as a true friend to suffering womanhood and as a strengthening medicine."

Mercury and Potash

Are dangerous even when administered by directions and under the eye of a good physician, and when put up in nostrums, often by incompetent persons, are apt to produce evil consequences. Be careful of these poisonous mixtures or you may regret it. SWIFT'S SPECIFIC is not only preferable to these dangerous compounds in the treatment of Blood and Skin diseases, but eliminates the poison of Mercury and Potash from the system by toning up the organism and forcing out the poison through the pores of the skin.

WHILE ON THE WAY.

To the Surprise and Delight of Her Friends a Young Lady Recovers from Almost Fatal Heart Trouble—What Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy Can Do—A Happy Home Circle.

Next to the sad duty of bearing the bodies of our dead to their long rest, is that of taking our loved living, when stricken with disease, in search of help which appears the more hopeless the nearer it is approached.

Yet when Mr. Nicholas Howell, of Waverly, Chemung Co., N. Y., left his home some time since for New York, it was on such an errand. By his side was his daughter, whose case had been abandoned by the home physicians as one of incurable disease of the heart. When the train reached Peekskill it was clear that the almost dying girl could not be carried a mile farther with safety. Emaciated in body, shattered in nerve, and melancholy in mind the poor girl had lost interest in her own fate.

But who may know their fate—either for good or evil? By the earnest advice of friends in Peekskill, Mr. Howell tenderly conveyed his daughter to the office of Dr. David Kennedy, in Rondout, N.Y. Dr. Kennedy perceived that she was suffering from heart disease, and also from an advanced stage of a complaint common to women. Having given directions in reference to diet and clothing, the Doctor prescribed what is now well known as DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, (Rondout, N. Y.) as his young patient's only medicine. Not long after the threatening symptoms vanished, the light returned to her eyes, the bloom to her cheeks and happiness to her heart, an example of a recovery which is as wonderful as the medicine that effected it.

Is the season in which bad or poisoned blood is most apt to show itself. Nature, at this juncture, needs something to assist it in throwing off the impurities which have collected by the sluggish circulation of blood during the cold winter months. Swift's Specific is nature's great helper, as it is a purely vegetable alterative and tonic.

Rev. L. B. Paine, Macon, Ga., writes: "We have been using Swift's Specific at the orphans' home as a remedy for blood complaints, and as a general health tonic, and have had remarkable results from its use on the children and employes of the institution. It is such an excellent tonic, and keeps the blood so pure, that the system is less liable to disease. It has cured some of our children of Scrofula."

A WATER-SPOUT

Does Some Disastrous Work in Kansas.

Railroad Tracks Washed Away, Cars Wrecked and Seventy Cattle Killed.

LEAVENWORTH, KAN., May 17.—A water-spout washed away the track on the Missouri Pacific and Union Pacific Railroads west of here to-day. On the former road about 150 feet was washed away. Seven cars loaded with cattle and an engine and tender went into the river, being completely wrecked. Seventy cattle were killed. The track was covered in places, and in other places the water was two to five feet deep. On the Union Pacific hail fell to the depth of two inches, and three-quarters of a mile of track was washed away. A bridge was carried away further west. All trains are delayed, and will be for several hours. The rain was heavy here, but no damage is reported to crops.

WHO DIED FIRST

In that Awful Disaster on Lake Huron?—An Interesting Legal Point Involved.

CINCINNATI, May 16.—The case to come before the Common Pleas Court involving the property of the late Wm. H. Woods and wife will be one of unusual interest to lawyers. Thornton M. Hinkle, administrator of Wm. H. Woods, brought suit in the Common Pleas Court against Prof. E. S. Wayne, administrator of Mary W. Woods. Wm. H. Woods and his wife were lost, together with the steamer Asia and many others, in September, 1882, in a gale on Lake Huron. She was crowded with people, nearly all of whom went down with her and perished immediately. Of those officers, passengers and crew who succeeded in launching three of the ship's boats, only two persons lived to tell the story, after drifting many hours. These were D. A. Finkis and Christy Ann Morrison, passengers. They were strangers to each other until thus singularly and awfully thrown together in an open boat on a storm-lashed lake. They were repeatedly thrown into the water by the overturnings of the boat, but succeeded in clinging to the life-lines, and, after seeing strong men perish around them, in reaching land. A romantic sequel to this strange introduction has come about in their happy marriage. Positively, these were the only survivors. Mrs. Woods' body was found. There has been no trace of Mr. Woods' body. The two survivors did not know them and heard nothing about them. The question as to which died first, Mr. Woods or Mrs. Woods, can not be answered. The amount involved is $44,000. There is a will of Wm. H. Woods, in which he enumerates $25,000 of life insurance for the benefit of his wife, and this codicil, made on the afternoon of the same day that the will was made—on the 19th of August, 1880—in which is this language: "I direct that in the event of the decease of my wife before my own, or on, or about the same time, so that she may not have made a will, that all insurance policies taken on my life, as enumerated in item two, for the benefit of my wife, are to go into my general estate, which is to be divided as follows:" Three legacies of $5,000 each, to three relatives, brothers and sister of his wife; and the rest of his estate is divided into three equal parts, one to go to his brother, one to the wife of his brother, and the other to a young lady whom they had raised but had not legally adopted. Mr. and Mrs. Woods had no children.

A Mystery.

BALTIMORE, MD., May 17.—The mystery surrounding the death and identity of the beautiful young girl found suffocated by gas at the Niagara House, this city, on the 9th. inst., has not yet been solved. A few days ago a young man giving his name as R. S. Roberts called upon the authorities and said he represented H. C. Roberts, residing at Pana, Putnam County, Ill., who was an uncle of the deceased young lady. Her real name he refused to give, although he said she was known as Edna Tate, the same name under which she registered at the hotel. Young Roberts paid all the funeral expenses and had her body placed in a vault in the Eastern Cemetery. Miss Tate's effects, including the $25 found in her pocket-book, were given to Roberts. Yesterday Marshal Gray received a letter and photograph of a young girl from Mrs. Gundolph, of Mount Crawford, Rockingham, County, Va., stating that her daughter Jennie had been missing for two weeks. Mrs. Gundolph had seen an account of the death of Miss Tate, and she was of the opinion from the description that the deceased was her daughter. The picture was carefully examined, and the proprietors of the hotel and others fully identified the picture with that of the dead girl. Accordingly, the body was sent to Virginia last night. To-day information was received from Virginia that the body was not that of Mrs. Gundolph's daughter, and stating that the remains would be sent back to Baltimore. Hence, it is not known who the deceased really is. She is magnificently dressed and had costly jewelry. Colonel Joyce, the proprietor of Niagara Hotel, says he has received over forty letters inquiring about young girls missing from their homes who it was thought might be the deceased. Five of the letters were from Chicago, four from New York, eight from Philadelphia and seven from Virginia.

She Wanted to Die.

CHICAGO, May 17.—Julia Colson, wife of Norman Colson, owned a pet dog named Jip. When the dog bit a child of Mrs. J. Segale, and was ordered killed, Mrs. Colson withered like a stricken lily. To-day her husband and son returned to their home only to find the door locked, and their loudest knockings brought no response. On forcing open the door Mrs. Colson was found lying on the floor almost asphyxiated. She had closed the room and turned on all the gas. A note on the bureau disclosed the motive of the act. "Bury me with Jip," were the cruel words that stared the distracted husband in the face. Mrs. Colson still lives, but Jip died at sunset.

The Manly Art.

PARIS, May 17.—The recent order of the French Minister of War, making boxing part of the regular training of French soldiers, has caused a similar informal order to be given to English regiments.

OVER THE OCEAN.

Attempt to Reach General Gordon—Burning of a Vienna Theater—The New Minister to Berlin.

BERLIN, May 16.—The Emperor has accepted the resignation of Bismarck from the Presidency of the Cabinet, and appointed as his successor Boetticher, Prussian Minister of State. The Tageblatt to-day positively asserts that Richards Muckle, of the Philadelphia Ledger, will succeed Sargent as U. S. Minister to Berlin. Muckle, the paper says, is an Alsatian by birth, but persona grata to Bismarck.

LONDON, May 16.—The Government has sent orders to Cairo directing that efforts be made to communicate with General Gordon by other routes than by Berber. Secret emissaries will be sent by way of Kassala and also by the caravan routes from Dongola and Merawich to Khartoum. An Assouan dispatch says troops have begun an advance for the relief of Berber and Khartoum.

VIENNA, May 16.—Stadt Theater burned to-day. The fire started at five in the afternoon. It originated in the gallery, and spread rapidly. The roof fell in at 5:40, carrying with it the great chandeliers. The iron curtain separating the stage from the auditorium fell at 6:30. The flames immediately attacked the stage, and it and the theatrical properties were destroyed. The firemen succeed in extinguishing the flames at ten, but not before the entire building had been ruined. Several persons were injured. The fire was caused by the carelessness of painters at work in the building.

Redemption of Trade Dollars.

WASHINGTON, May 16.—Several Representatives from the Pacific Coast have received inquiries of late from parties interested in the redemption of trade dollars, in regard to the chances of legislation on that subject at this session. The writers all claim to be entirely disinterested pecuniarily, but they urge that as a matter of public policy and justice the bill should pass. The answers returned generally expressed doubts of its ultimate success, owing to the strong opposition known to exist in the Senate, and one member stated decidedly that the redemption would never be made for more than the bullion value of the coin. The uncertainty which exists has, it is learned, caused speculators, who bought large sums of trade dollars in anticipation of their redemption for standard dollars, to quietly unload their stock at such profits as they can realize, and this is being done gradually, so as not to excite suspicion. The assertion that most of these coins are in the hands of laboring people is not believed here, and a general hostility to the speculative scheme now exists. Many silver men argue that there is no reason why the Government should pay the holders of trade dollars one hundred cents, while the bullion owners can only get the market price by weight.

Cheating a Railway.

ST. LOUIS, May 16.—Frank McGinnis, weighmaster of the Missouri Pacific Railway, was arrested late this afternoon, charged with defrauding the railroad company by a system of false weights. It is said if a car weighed 30,000 pounds he would report it at 20,000 and divide the difference with the shipper. He had a partner named J. S. White, who looked up the business, and it is asserted that quite a number of shippers are involved in the fraud. White was also arrested, and confessed enough to reveal the whole scheme. It is said that one of the largest lumber firms here has saved over $7,000 in freight during the past nine months by getting short weights from McGinnis. The railroad company claims to have lost very large sums of money by the fraud. McGinnis was connected with the defunct Hibernia Savings Bank, of this city, and was indicted for embezzlement in connection with its failure. Both were released on $2,500 bonds. McGinnis denies the charge against him.

Triple Lynching.

PRESCOTT, ARK., May 16.—Frank Ward, a peddler, on April 12, dined at Polk's house, twelve miles from Center Point. Polk accompanied him to a creek, where, aided by a man named Kuykendill, he murdered Ward, burning the body and pulverizing the bones. Yesterday the murderers were arrested and Kuykendill confessed Search was instituted by Ward's father, resulting in the arrest of the two Polk brothers and a man named Kuykendill on suspicion. One of the Polks confessed, and the prisoners were delivered to the sheriff, who prepared to take them to Arkadelphia for safe keeping. A party of Ward's friends at Prescott were organizing for vengeance, when a message was received that the citizens of Howard County had stopped the party en route to Arkadelphia, taken the prisoners, and hanged all three without the formality of a court.

Fell One Hundred Feet.

PAINESVILLE, O., May 17.—William H. Doane, day operator at the Nickle-Plate Depot, fell from the Grand River Bridge today and escaped without a broken bone. He was fixing the telegraph wire, when his foot slipped, and he was hurled the frightful distance of more than one hundred feet, striking in six feet of water. He regained consciousness and swam ashore, and was conveyed to his home. The physician refuses to express an opinion as to the extent of his injury, until he has slept. It is believed by some that he is injured internally, as he is vomiting blood.

The Methodist Conference.

PHILADELPHIA, May 17.—The Methodist Episcopal Conference in session here, adopted the report of the Itinerant Committee that it was inexpedient at this time to consider the subject of women preaching. The report authorizing revision of the German hymn-book was adopted. It was agreed that the missions of Japan and Mexico should be organized into annual conferences. A report for an enabling act to organize Denmark into an annual conference was adopted.

Damage Against a Railroad.

PHILADELPHIA, May 17.—A dispatch to the Times from Morristown, Pa., says the jury in the civil case of Samuel Freedlay, of Pott's Landing, against the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, rendered a verdict this evening in favor of the plaintiff for $20,822, the full amount of damage claimed for the loss of a dwelling and other buildings by fire which originated from sparks from a freight engine.

TWO WOMEN

With Four Living Husbands---A Double Enoch Arden Case.

Remarkable Complications Caused by the Unexpected Return of Two Sailors Who Were Supposed to be Dead.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., May 18.—Over three years ago the schooner Joseph Mayfield, owned principally by Jonathan May, of this city, sailed out of the Delaware upon a voyage to the West Indies. Lemuel Williams commanded her, and George Daisey was her first mate. Each left behind a wife, living near the little seacoast hamlet of Ocean View, south of Cape Henlopen, Delaware. The vessel sailed beyond the breakwater, and the two wives might have seen her spreading canvass as the schooner passed their seaside home out to the treacherous ocean. It was a fatal voyage, and as week succeeded week, and month followed month without tidings of vessel or crew, dread succeeded anxiety; and as the months grew into years a gloomy cast settled down upon the homes of those who had gone down to a watery grave. Mrs. Daisey, the wife of the mate, was less than twenty years of age, and was the daughter of Captain Williams. Mother and daughter, thus widowed by the sea, were the last to abandon all hopes of the return of the unfortunate master, mate or crew of the ill-starred schooner. One day last year the wife of Isaac Wharton, a wealthy resident of Ocean View, suddenly died, and a few weeks afterward the widower asked Mrs. Williams to marry him. After a little struggle with recollections of the past she consented. Soon afterward Mrs. Geo. Daisey married young Luther Evans, and the memory of the two unfortunate sailors began to fade away. The neighbors and friends had long since ceased to speculate upon the fate of the Mayfield and her crew. A few months ago Captain Eben Williams, the son of the lost captain, sailed in the Mary E. Fenwick for the same port to which his father had started upon his last voyage. As nothing was heard from his vessel for a long time it was supposed that he had also been lost at sea. The good people at Ocean View and the surrounding country have been, therefore, thrown into almost a tumult of excitement upon the receipt of information not only the Captain of the Fenwick, but that Captain Lemuel Williams and his mate, George Daisey, have been found. The former was reported safe at Trinidad, while the other two were on their way to their homes from a far Eastern port. Mrs. Lemuel Williams, now Mrs. Israel Wharton, and George Daisey's wife received this wonderful news with mingled feelings of dismay and pleasure. The gossips have been busy every hour of the day, and the end of the dreadful complication in the two households has been the theme of all tongues.

Digging for Diamonds.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., May 18.—S. B. Boynton, of this city, who is digging for diamonds near Waukesha, Wis., found two in good gravel strata this week. One of the stones was a splendid specimen, but the other was an imperfect crystallization, and is what is known as a "Tort" diamond. After the gravel had been penetrated hardpan was struck and he experienced trouble with water. This week he will sink the shaft five feet lower, and expects to strike a diamond depository. At a depth of fifty-five feet the diggers came upon a piece of timber, evidently tamarack, in a splendidly preserved condition. It must have lain in its present bed for thousands of years. It was not in the least petrified. In the upper strata of gravel Boynton found quantities of topaz stones, malachites, sardonies, chrysolites, cornelians, and pieces of garnate. These specimens are very fine. Such crowds have been attracted to the spot that he has been obliged to build a fence around the entire claim to keep them away, thousands coming from the surrounding country in one day. He is operating on what is known as the Kettle range of hills. They are mainly in Waukesha County, extending semi-circularly about 100 miles, with a small spur Racine County. The range incloses a gravel float, which must have swept down from Michigan during the glacial period.

Terrific Gas Explosion.

WELLSBURG, W. VA., May 18.—An explosion of natural gas, mixed with air, occurred at Harvey Brothers' paper-mill this morning, at 7 o'clock, produced a noise like the discharge of a cannon, and was heard for miles. Isaac Jones, one of the engineers, turned the gas under the boilers, without igniting, for the purpose of cooling them so they could be entered and cleaned, and after an absence of some time, he returned, and was preparing for cleaning, when the explosion occurred, blowing him against the wall and burning him dangerously. The stack is rent from bottom to top, the roof of the engine-room lifted off, the walls cracked and windows broken to atoms.

Thugs Fatally Wounded By Policemen.

PITTSBURG, May 18.—At an early hour this morning Dexey Bray and Wm. Hendershot, two well known characters of Lawrenceville, were shot and fatally wounded by Policeman McAleese. Bray and Hendershot tried to abduct an unsophisticated German girl, and officers English and McAleese interfered. The ruffians and their friends turned on the officers, and in self defense McAleese fired the fatal shots. Both men are living, but no hopes are entertained of their recovery. Officers McAleese and English were badly injured, and it is feared they are hurt internally.

Congress to Adjourn by July 1.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—Speaker Carlisle says he does not think any one ought to make any calculation on an adjournment of Congress before July 1, but that he is confident that business can be ended by that date, unless there shall be a deadlock between the two houses over some of the appropriation bills.

Severe Sentences.

MADRID, May 18.—A Court-martial at Saragossa for the trial of fourteen officers charged with desertion, sentenced one Major to imprisonment for life; a Lieutenant was sentenced to imprisonment for twenty years, and the others twelve years.

—Joseph E. Murrel, a citizen of Mobile, Ala., has died from a strange malady. Whenever he would lay down in sleep he would strangle, so that it was always necessary for some one to be with him in order to keep him from falling into convulsions. The only rest he has had for a dozen years was from dozing in a sitting position.—Chicago Herald.

—The terrible fires in Maryland all came from a bonfire started in fun at Charlestown by some boys. Thousands of acres of valuable forest burned.—Baltimore American.

XLVIIIth CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—SENATE.—A number of petitions were presented opposing any action of Congress that would lead to the destruction of healthy competion in the telegraph business. Mr. Sherman presented a petition, numerously signed, in favor of placing General Freemont on the retired list of the army. Mr. Blair, from the Committee on Pensions, and by direction of that committee, reported unfavorably the bill to grant a pension to General Ward B. Burnet, and submitted the dissenting views of the minority calendar. Mr. Logan, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the bill to place General Grant on the retired list. Mr. Logan asked that the bill be put at once upon its passage. Unanimous consent was given and the bill was at once read the third time and passed without debate or remark. The bill provides that: "In recognition of the distinguished service rendered the United States, General U. S. Grant, late General of the Army, be placed on the retired list with rank and full pay of General of the Army."

Pending debate the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—The House went into committee of the whole on the consul and diplomatic appropriation bill, and Mr. Burns explained its provisions. Considerable debate was indulged in, without action. Mr. Robinson (N. Y.) moved to abolish the office of Minister to Great Britain. The motion was lost and the committee rose. Mr. Harmer presented a memorial from the Women's Silk Culture Association in favor of the establishment of a Bureau of Silk Culture. Referred. Mr. Bland, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures, reported a bill to establish a mint at St. Louis. Referred to the committee of the whole. Mr. Sprague asked unanimous consent to put on its passage the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase about $42,000,000 of bonds with the greenbacks held in the Treasury for the redemption of retired National bank circulation, which would relieve the money market to the extent of adding $42,000,000 to the circulation. Mr. Weller objected. Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—SENATE.—The Senate agreed when it adjourned to-day it be to Monday next. The Chair laid before the Senate a message from the President recommending an appropriation to enable the Government to execute the provisions of the Convention between the United States and Mexico, relating to the boundary line between the two countries. Mr. Morgan offered a resolution in the Senate, which under the rule went over one day, directing the Committee on Finance to examine into the causes of failures of such of the National Banks in the city of New York as have suspended business in May, 1884, and report whether the said failures have, to any, and what, extent, resulted from any violation of the laws relating to their conduct, or from giving certificates, drafts, or by their acceptance, draft or other commercial paper drawn upon them, directly or indirectly, in evasion or in violating of the laws, and whether any National Bank in New York City has been engaged since July 12, 1882, in violation or evasion of the laws regulating their conduct, and that the committee have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate, to visit the city of New York, to send for persons or papers, and examine witnesses on oath.

HOUSE.—Mr. Laird, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill authorizing the location of a branch Soldiers' Home in Arkansas, Colorado, Kansas, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri or Nebraska. To Committee of the Whole. The Senate bills passed authorizing the construction of bridges across the Rio Grande, between Eagle Pass and Piedras Negras, and between Laredo and Nuevo Laredo. The bill passed authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, between the north and south lines of Douglass County, Nebraska. The bill passed authorizing the extension of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad to a point on the military lands at Fortress Monroe. The morning hour was dispensed with, and the House went into Committee of the Whole on the Diplomatic and Consular Appropriation Bill. Mr. Hitt moved to amend by restoring to $12,000 the salaries of Ministers to Austria and Italy. The bill reduces them to $10,000.

WASHINGTON, May 16.—SENATE.—Senate not in session.

After debate the bill was finally laid aside with favorable recommendation, and the committee proceeded to the consideration of the Army Appropriation Bill.

WASHINGTON, May 17.—SENATE.—Senate not in session.

HOUSE.—A bill passed granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a dam across the Mississippi at St. Cloud. The Senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill were non-concurred in. A bill passed extending until December 31, 1885, the duration of the Court of Commissioners on the Alabama Claims. A bill passed to change the Eastern and Northern Judicial Districts of Texas, and to attach a part of the Indian Territory to those districts. On motion of Mr. Cassidy the bill was passed to relieve settlers on Duck Valley Indian Reservation, of Elko County, Nev. A bill also passed for the appointment of two additional Associate Justices for Supreme Court of Dakota. The next bill called up stirred up a family quarrel in the Missouri delegation. It was the bill to amend the act dividing the State of Missouri into two judicial districts, and to divide the Eastern and Western districts thereof into divisions and to prescribe the times and places of holding courts therein. Mr. Broadhead, who reported the bill, said there was a division of sentiment among the Missouri delegation with regard to the propriety of the bill and moved to recommit it. The motion was lost. On the amendment no quorum voted. Adjourned.

Tour of the Siamese Embassy.

NEW YORK, May 18.—The Siamese Embassy arrived to-day from Washington, and in two weeks will begin a tour of the country.

—How much of humbug there is in the claim that competitive trials of strength should be encouraged because they develop a taste for healthful sports is suggested in the report from New York that a walking-match came off in an atmosphere so stifled by the smell of tobacco and bad rum that one of the contestants was made sick by it.—Boston Transcript.

—The Rochester (N. Y.) Union has opened its columns for opinions and suggestions on protecting wives from drunken husbands.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The market has been in a condition decidedly favorable to sellers. The demand from large manufacturers has been free and uniform, and the shipping inquiry has also been in good form, and no type has been neglected. Burley tobaccos have been active at full prices throughout the week, and the large variety of grades suited to the plug trade have sold somewhat higher. Lugs have been firm as well as leaf. Prices have not varied materially, but there has been a quiet tendency to appreciation. Dark and heavy leaf has been brisk, with a strengthening tendency. Green-river fillers have sold irregularly higher, low end medium grades being 50@75c higher. Higher grades are firm, but with less noticeable changes in prices. Lugs, except the lowest grades, have been active and firm. We quote full weight packages of new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 30 @ 6 50	$6 50 @ 7 50
Common lugs	6 75 @ 7 15	[illegible] @ 8 00
Medium lugs	7 35 @ 7 65	8 00 @ 9 00
Good lugs	8 00 @ 8 25	10 00 @12 00
Common leaf	7 50 @ 8 50	10 00 @13 00
Medium leaf	8 75 @ 9 50	14 00 @17 00
Good leaf	10 00 @11 00	18 00 @21 00
Fine and fancy leaf	12 00 @16 00	23 50 ....

The road will be a great convenience, and an ornament to the mile and half of river front.

MR. WILLIAM A. LOGAN, living near Nicholasville, had a large new barn burned a few nights since. It was the work of an incendiary. The barn contained about four tons of hay, fifty barrels of corn, a new road cart, buggy, all kinds of farming implements, gear, etc., also a nice horse, which Mr. Logan paid $165 for a few days before. The barn was insured for $400. Mr. Logan lost a similar barn and all his tobacco last fall, which was also set on fire.

ED LOOMIS, a youth of sixteen years was lodged in jail at Covington, a few days since by United States Bailiff McCarthy, of Franklin County. He is accused of robbing the Post-office at Frankfort, and destroying a lot of letters. He will be tried at the present term of the Court. His bail bond is fixed at $2,500.

THERE was a lively battle in the belfry of the new church in California, near Louisville, a few days ago, between Herman Weist, a butcher, and George Godfrey, the sexton of the church, and both men were badly used up in the encounter. It appears that Weist owns a fine covey of pigeons, and that some weeks since these pets moved their habitation from Weist's stable-loft to the steeple of the church. Godfrey has been notified by Weist that he would make an early raid into the new pigeon-roost, and so the latter tried it on, and had climed into the cross-timbers, high up in the place, when Godfrey, upon hearing of it, started in pursuit, and at a point fully one hundred feet above ground the men clinched and beat each other until both fell, from exhaustion, to a platform some twelve feet below, and upon this the struggle continued until finally Godfrey was forced backward across a piece of timber and fell further into the network of obstructions that he had so rapidly climbed to reach Weist. They continued thus to fight for half an hour, and when they reached the ground floor both looked as if they had fallen from the giddy height of the spire and struck head foremost.

AT the Runnymede Farm of Clay & Woodford, in Bourbon County, seventeen head of yearling were sold for total of $22,035.

DUDLEY MONAHAN, aged fourteen years was run over and instantly killed by a freight train on the Cincinnati Southern road, at High Bridge, a few days ago. Monahan is from Louisville, and the only son of a widow, which makes the unfortunate occurrence all the more frightful. He was on a visit to his aunt, Mrs. Entner, and went down on a local freight train with a companion to see High Bridge. He got on a returning freight, and fell off between the cars, the wheels passing over his body mangling it in a terrible manner.

THE Legislature adjourned sine die, on the 12th.

THE DAIRY.

—A quart of good milk should weigh about 2.15 pounds, or nearly 2 pounds, 2½ ounces. If milk is weighed, this rule will give the monthly yield in quarts more exactly than measuring.

—A Norwich, Ct., paper tells about a farmer there who keeps only one cow, but who sells 1,000 one-pound balls of the "best butter" from his "dairy" yearly. Oleomargarine is his best cow.

—To keep your cows good natured while milking, call the milking a part of the day's work and do not expect them to work in the field till dark and then milk a dozen cows in the night.

—It is claimed that while cows giving exceptionally large quantities of milk will sometimes make large butter tests, as a rule the two things do not go together, being inconsistent with each other.

—In feeding calves remember they are not the most brilliant animals in the world, and it is questionable if they ever know when they have enough any more than a boy would in a green apple tree. For this and many other reasons it is well to keep a watch over them to see that each one gets some of the food offered and not too much of it.—American Dairyman.

—The Farmers' Review fears that the dairy fair business will be overdone this year. We think not, as we do not believe more than one will be held. The International association will not be likely to hold one, at least that is the opinion of the President; the Secretary of the Illinois Dairymen's Association is apprehensive that the proposed fair will not be held, so that narrows the number down to the National Association.

—It is a serious mistake to neglect handling young heifers until after they have dropped their first calf. At this time their bags are apt to be swollen and tender, and the task of accustoming them to be milked is more difficult. The operation tends to enlarge the bag and the teats, and with good milking stock may make it necessary to draw milk once or twice a day for a week or more before the calf is dropped. Do not begrudge the extra trouble that this makes. It is a sign that the heifer will prove to be a deep milker.

—How awfully bad a man looks whose hair is never combed, and how uncomfortable he must feel! The cattle have hair over their whole body, and if never carded they look as bad as the uncombed man, and must feel a great deal worse. It is too bad to compel the poor brutes to go all winter without carding, and then it doesn't pay. They would do much better if carded every day, and this should certainly be well done at least twice each week. If we only notice how much they enjoy being carded, and how grateful they look, and see how much better they thrive, we would not regret the time and labor 'Tis only a little kindness, but even this pays.

—Lumps in the udder: Garget often leaves the legacy of a lumpy bag—one or more big, hard lumps; milk flows from the quarter or quarters in which such lumps occur, but they are an annoyance as well as a disfigurement. Sometimes they yield to treatment, and often they do not. The best thing to do is to knead and rub the lumps, so that there may be a tendency of blood to the parts and some excitement to the absorptive functions. This absorption may be induced or quickened by giving the cow small but frequent doses of iodide of potassium—a salt very much like common salt, with which it may be mixed when given.—American Dairyman.

Keeping Accounts With Cows.

I was milking in the barn when young Squire Lawton came in. I lifted up the pail and hung it on the spring balance.

"Just thirteen pounds," said I, and marked it on the little board on the wall just opposite where the cow stood. "What do you do that for," said he. "Why, I always count, measure and weigh everything on this farm," said I. "My father taught me that when I was a boy." "But what's the use here?" said he. "You have all the milk, and no one can cheat you." Don't you be sure of that. Now look here. You see this board. That's Topsy's milk account. Here, you see, is 17 pounds, 16½ pounds, 18 pounds, and then comes 11 pounds. That struck me all of a heap, and I went right there and then to Topsy to see what was the matter. Her nose was hot and dry, and her mouth was slobbering and she was not eating. I soon found what was the matter. She had been chewing the fence-rails and a big splinter was jammed into her mouth between her teeth, and her jaw was swelled badly. Now, I mightn't have found that out for two or three days if I hadn't weighed the milk. But you see I soon set her right again. I saved a good deal of trouble by it. And then look here. Here is 13½ pounds, 15 pounds, 17 pounds, 12 pounds, 11 pounds, 14 pounds, and then here you see is only 6½ pounds, and all down. 6½ pounds, 7 pounds, 7½ pounds, 5 pounds, 5½ pounds. Now look at that cow. She's pretty, ain't she? But, bless you, handsome is as handsome does, and that cow don't stay here any longer than she is fat enough for beef; for she ain't half handsome enough for a dairyman to keep. Then you see these glasses. These are to measure the cream by. A cow that won't give fifteen per cent. of cream won't pay to keep with the feed I give them; and a heifer that won't make ten per cent. won't pay to raise, and is only good to sell to those who sell milk. Now, how could I tell all this if I didn't weigh and measure? See here, this is the feed measure; one of these goes on to the feed for every cow at every meal, and that scoop holds just two quarts. This basket holds a full bushel, and every cow gets that full every feed. And two or three get a scoopful more. You see it's all brought down to rule. No thumb rule either, but weights and measures every time. A man who don't weigh and measure everything about a dairy can't tell what he's doing, and it is just as easy for him to lose a dollar a day as it is to fall off a log. Now, my boy, put that wrinkle on your horn. It's worth a thousand dollars to you if you don't forget it, but you are welcome to it for nothing." Cor. The Dairy.

THE SPECIAL grand jury appointed to consider the causes which led to the Cincinnati riots appear to have hit lots of heads in its report. THE Sanitary Engineer condemns the practice in small towns of arching over natural water courses and depending upon them to remove household wastes. GEN. GRANT'S being placed on the list of retired army officials came in good time, following a financial disaster which consumed a large amount of his means. It is to be hoped that General's Presidential aspirations are now dispelled for the remainder of his earthly career.

The following is a synopsis of the new Common School Law recently passed by the Kentucky Legislature.

It adds to the common school fund the tax of twenty-two cents on every $100 worth of railroad property and such a share of the special taxes paid by turnpike companies, banks and other corporation as twenty-two cents forms of the State levy of fifty-two cents also, the entire annual tax on certain banks in which the State has an interest. The effect of this, according to an estimate by Auditor Hewitt, will be to increase the school fund by $170,000 per year.

Local taxation is to be voted upon by the people of an entire county instead of single districts, and a tax voted—not to exceed twenty-five cents on $100 is to be collected as other county taxes are.

Trustees of common schools in each district shall select a list of text books from those recommended by the State Board of Education, and no change shall be made for five years. County Courts may make an appropriation for supplying indigent children with books. A text book on the laws of health is required to be used.

The County Superintendent is required to possess certain qualifications, and to possess a certificate from a Circuit Judge to that effect. He may be fined and imprisoned for the neglect of his duties, one of which is to see that certain fines collected in his county are added to the school fund. No teacher and no person holding another county office shall be eligible as Superintendent.

District Trustees shall be indicted and fined for failing to have erected a suitable schoolhouse where none exists, or where one has been condemned by the County Superintendent. A local tax may be levied for building a school-house, if such be the will of a majority of the voters in the district, otherwise the Trustees may impose a tax of $2 per head for furnishing fuel for school-houses, and this tax may be paid in fuel, if desired. Trustees shall call out the able bodied men in the district to erect a house.

For colored schools three Trustees shall be elected in each district, as in white districts. But negroes shall not vote at elections for Trustees of white schools and vice versa.

The practice of granting special licenses to teachers not properly qualified is abolished.

In certain cases, in large districts sparsely inhabited, school stations may exist in different parts of a district, the session being divided so as to suit the convenience of the different sections. Where schools were divided into two classes, three and five months, they are now given in three, four and five months term, thirty-five pupils and under, for three months, thirty-five to forty-five, four months, and over forty-five, five months.

Alexander's Abdallah (sire of Goldsmith Maid, 2:14) got by Rysdyk's Hambletonian; dam Katie Darling by Bay Roman.

Mambrino Patchen, sire of Mambrino Abdallah leads all other living horses in number of grandchildren that have beaten 2:30, and the average speed is faster. Mambrino Patchen leads in number and speed having 8 sons and 7 daughters that have produced 16 trotters in 2:30 and under. Mambrino Abdallah's colts are nearly all bay. He is good in all points, great substance and stamina, and was the fastest natural trotter at even 12 months old I ever saw, and I priced him then at $5,000, and not a cent less would have bought him at that time. He is a sure and first-class breeder. I have sold a number of his colts at yearlings for $500 each. I sold a filly at 18 months old for $1,000, and a colt coming 3 years old for $1,200, and a four-year-old for $1,500. Mambrino Abdallah breeds as fine colts as any horse living, and his colts show extra action, extra size, and always command good prices. Yours Truly, L. HERR.

The undersigned state that we know the horse Mambrino Abdallah, now in control of O. P. TROUBLE IN CONSTANCE

To the Editors of the Recorder:

The clans of Constance have been working themselves up of late, till their feelings of revenge and animosity came near culminating on the 12th inst., disastrously to some of the lovers of trouble in that place. A young man named Robt. Calvert, was stopping at D. Castinetto's, and some of the boys thought that as the order of the day in Boone, at present, in the way of getting up a reputation, is to mob some body, they determined they would try their hand on Calvert, and after he had left Castinetto's on his way to work, W. E. Anderson and Wm. Masters suddenly appeared before him, when Masters grabbed him by the collar and began to assault him. Castinetto hearing the row ran to the scene of action, and pulled Masters off of Calvert, and when released he commenced a hasty retreat, Masters pursuing him, and after running about seventy-five yards, Calvert stopped and told Masters to halt, which he refused to do, thereupon Calvert blazed away with his pistol and [illegible] him in the leg and halted him, Calvert then retreated to Castinetto's house, pursued by Anderson and Masters. At the house Calvert secured a doubled barrelled shotgun of Castinetto's with which to defend himself, and was about to pour a volley into the enemy, when Castinetto took the gun from him, and advised him to "skin out." Calvert acted upon the advice and fled for his life by the way of a back door which the mob, in its excitement failed to guard. Immediately after he had left the house was surrounded, and they shouted "take him out and string him up" Castinetto went out on his front porch when the leader of the mob abused him, using violent and profane language. The mob continued to guard Castinetto's house for about two hours and, until constable Watts, whom they had ordered up, came with a warrant, charging Robt. Calvert with using profane language in the presence of other, &c., and under the advice of the leaders of the mob, and by the powers of himself and his official authority, he proposed to search the house of Castinetto for Calvert, asserting to Castinetto his authority to do so. He made search No. 1, with a posse at his back, composed of Lum Carter, W. Carter and Castinetto, which search was fruitless. The mob, not being satisfied, ordered that another search be made, when the constable took in addition to the above posse Joe Learns and began search No. 2, which was also a failure. The mob was still determined and dissatisfied, and ordered a third search to be made, and the constable added to his posse, Hon. J. H. Walton, and proceeded to make search No. 3, which was as a matter of course, a failure. The mob ordered the constable to make the fourth search, when he summoned, as one of his posse, Robert Masters, to whom Castinetto objected, but it was insisted that Masters should compose one of the posse, when Castinetto requested that Doc Anderson and Charley Kotmeyer go with Masters and watch him while he was in his house. They were summoned as a posse to watch a part of the former posse, while search No. 4, was being made which as a final, proved a failure. After it being demonstrated that Castinetto was not harboring Calvert, the force withdrew, and a messenger was dispatched to Burlington where warrants charging Calvert with using profane language in the presence of others, and carrying a pistol; and Masters and W. E. Anderson each with carrying a pistol, were obtained, and the parties, except Calvert, were taken before Esquire Baker, and after considerable legal sparing the causes were continued till the next Monday morning, and constable Sandford londed with subpoenas for witnesses, and the accused and witnesses returned to their homes to await the trial.

Promptly at 10 a. m. Monday, 'Squire Baker convened his court, and all the accused and witnesses were present.

The first case on the docket was the Commonwealth against William Masters, charged with using profane language in the presence of others. This case was tried by the Court, and the defendant fined $10.

The next case was the Commonwealth against William Masters, for carrying concealed a pistol. The Court tried the case and fined the defendant $25 and ten days in jail.

The third and last case on the docket was against W. E. Anderson for carrying concealed a pistol. In this the accused demanded a jury, which was promptly summoned by Constable R. H. Sandford. The testimony in this case being same as that adduced in the other two cases, reenforced by a pair of pocketless pants which it was sworn Anderson was wearing when it was charged that he concealed the pistol in his pocket. The jury was out but a few minutes when it returned a verdict of not guilty. Thus ended a tedious days court, a repetition of which neither the Judge nor attorneys want to experience again soon.

We acknowledge the receipt of a ticket to the Latonia Jockey Club races which commences on the 30th inst., and continues to June 7th.

The tumor taken from Mrs. Sarah Anderson by Dr. J. C. Terrill, some days since, weighed 40½ pounds. The incision in the abdomen required by the operation was 14 inches in length. Mrs. Anderson is improving rapidily and will soon be well again.

The new Christian Church at Bellevue, will be dedicated on the second Sunday in June. The dedicatory sermon will be preached by Elder W. J. Howe, at 11 o'clock a. m. A basket dinner will be served, and preaching again in the afternoon and at night.

Col. Graddy came into our office last press day just as we had finished the edition looking like an animated yellow clay bank. We soon learned that the colonel had just completed a long string of wire fence for F. Riddell among his clay banks. The colonel is a worker.

Floods come and go, but we continue to do business at our old stand in Lawrenceburg, Indiana, and those wanting tombstones or monuments will find our prices and designs most satisfactory. John Beall, of Hebron, is our agent in Boone county. Hurschart & Co., Lawrenceburg, Ind.

We met Hon. E. J. Green, of Kenton, on the train going into the city last Thursday. He looks none the worse on account of his four months labor as a lawmaker. He says local legislation incurs a heavy expense on the State and something should be done to reduce that branch of the legislature's business.

Attorney Tolin was called to Walton, last Thursday, to prosecute a man whom constable Moxiey had arrested charged with horsestealing. The offense was committed in Grant county, and the accused was returned to that county for trial. The capture was made near Richwood, and the party had two horses and a buggy in his possession, and was making good time toward the city.

KANSAS LETTER.

HARPER, Ks., May, 14, 1884.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

Your paper will visit its friends let them be where they may, and we assure you it is appreciated. I fear that I will have to subscribe for another copy, as my wife makes me take a back seat until she is through reading it, and it always did go against the grain with me to take things second-handed, but the RECORDER is good any time.

It seems that there's no end to immigration here. Every day we meet people from almost every State in the union, and people of almost every nation.

The farmers are mostly Russian Germans and Swedes, and, as a general thing, they make a success of their business.

Crops are looking very well. Small grain is heading, and some of the corn has been plowed the second time, and everything indicates a good crop this season. This is a great fruit country, and especially for peaches, which are cheaper than I ever saw them in Kentucky.

This a pleasant place to live. A gentle breeze is stirring at all times, and the nights are just cool enough for a person to sleep well. Kansas air agrees with me and my family, my little girls are acquiring double chins, while I am ten pounds heavier than I ever was at this time of year.

I had quite an exciting wolf chase without dogs the other day, and after a two hours chase, and just as I was getting him in close quarters, I was very suddenly halted by a barbed wire fence which gave me a warning to "look before you leap," and not run against a barbed wire fence if you do not wish to get scratched.

We have flowers of every description growing wild over the prairies, and most of them are very fragrant, every weed seems to support a beautiful flower. I think if Ponce De Leon had seen southern Kansas, Florida would have forever lost her name. Do not think that I'm puffing Kansas, but remember this is a very windy country, and had it not been you probably would never have heard from me.

There are some things Kansas is not a good place for. It is not a good place for doctors; and I have the first grave to see in Harper county. I was told [illegible] ame here, that the only way to start a cemetery was to kill someone, and after a time I convinced them that I could do about as well without it, at least they concluded to wait for a more willing subject.

This is a splendid place for young lawyers, as it is no trouble to raise the wind. Tell the boys when they come to bring their dogs, guns and fishing tackle, for our streams abound with spotted trout. GRASSHOPPER.

Calicoes 3½ cents a yard, muslin 2¾ cents a yard, best cheviots 8 cents a yard, at Ike May's, Lawrenceburg, Ind.

Dr. E. W. Duncan is assisting the County Clerk to copy the Assessor's book for the Auditor.

Isaac May at Lawrenceburg has the largest stock of fine ready made clothing, at the lowest price. Give him a call.

Mont Balsly was kicked by his stallion, Clay Chief, Sunday, and his jawbone broken and three of four teeth knocked out.

The Warsaw Independent says some tobacco was planted in Gallatin county last week, and much more could have been planted had the ground been prepared.

Tuesday morning our sanctum was graced with the smiling countenances of Messrs. John Botts and Lon Yerkes, two of Petersburg's gallant young men. For awhile we were a little suspicious of the smiles, but an investigation of the marriage records convinced us that they were natural with the young men.

W. B. Watts, a hero of the Ohio river falls, was in town the first of the week. He is the man who paced, for the period of eight, long, cold days, the deck of Capt. E. H. Baker's wrecked flat boat on the falls at Louisville, when one moment the mad waves threatened to sweep him from the deck, and the next the raging wind would almost divest him of his clothing. On the eighth day, almost frozen, and badly pinched by hunger, he availed himself of the first opportunity to communicate with the shore, and wrote the following memorable dispatch to Capt. Baker, whom he knew was in Louisville:

"Dear Ed.—Cold, dry and lonesome—send me a quart."

At that time his reputed age was 107 years, but he is not so old now.

Mrs. Sarah M. F. Rouse, (wife of Mr. Ezekiel Rouse, of this vicinity) died suddenly last Friday at her son-in-law's in Houston, Texas, whither she had gone on a visit. She had been in delicate health for years, but no immediate danger was expected. Mrs. R. had long been a resident of this county, and no lady stood higher in the estimation of her neighbors and acquaintances, and hundreds will drop a tear to her memory. She was a devout member of the Baptist church, and her life work was that of the devoted wife, mother, christian, neighbor and friend. Her remains reached here Tuesday night, and Wednesday morning her funeral was preached in the Baptist church by Rev. B. G. Tutt, after which her remains were taken to the family burying ground on the old Simms farm, and placed beside those of her children who had preceded her to the "better land." She was aged about 63 years.—Liberty (Mo.) Tribune, May 16.

BURLINGTON, : : KENTUCKY.

IN THE GRINDING OF THE DRIFT.

'Twas a little Southern town,
By the river nestling down.
Quaint and quiet, tucked away
From the busy world, it lay
Where the stranger seldom found it,
With its cypress swamps around it.

Rain, from morning until night;
Rain through darkness till the dawn—
Time for dawn: but scarce the light
Pierced the veil the world had on,
And the night came down again,
Softly in her robes of rain.
Peaceful lay the village, covered
By a silence strangely deep;
For the human brood was hovered
By the drowsy wings of sleep.

But the cypressed stained lagoons,
Nature's somber-souled quadroons,
Felt the tonic of the rain
Stealing through each sluggish vein,
And through deep and dismal fens
Slid they from their slimy dens,
Whispering low: "We come, we come!
Lead us, river, strong and free!
We will sound Death's muffled drum
From the cypress to the sea."
So the river heard the tramp
Of the waters through the night,
Saw the demon of the swamp
Swing his jack-o'-lantern light.

Silent as an army stealing
On its unsuspecting foe,
Roar of rain its steps concealing,
Rose the river from below;
Climbed the hill with stealthy tread,
Sent its skirmish waves ahead,
Captured each unguarded boat,
Set the wooden walks afloat,
Turned the streets to rivers wide,
Touched the houses, stole inside,
Climbing higher still, and higher,
Till it sang amidst the fire.
While the embers answered, screaming,
But the warning was in vain,
For the people lay a-dreaming
To the lullaby of rain.

Suddenly the thunder spoke
Till the world rocked to and fro,
And the little town awoke
In the clutches of its foe.

"It is mine!" the tempest cried.
"No! 'Tis mine!" the flood replied.
"Mine! The water-spout has sent me Reinforcements. It is mine!"
Roared the hideous cloud: "Content thee!
Wreck and ruin join the line!"

Burying deep the cypress knees,
Rushed the furious waters down,
And with battering-rams of trees
Smote and crushed the little town.

What was man? A being dizzy
In the terrible up-lift.
What was home? A fragile bubble
In the grinding of the drift.
What was love? A lifetime focused
In an agonizing kiss,
Seeking still one last expression
Through the water's angry hiss.
What was life! A lighted taper,
Which the furious tide put out.
What remained? One stubborn chimney,
With the waters all about.

THE MEEK FAMILY.

I don't know what I had done to merit the spite of fortune which led me to No. 132 Peckover street in search of lodgings.

Were the apartments dingy? Decidedly so. The paper was of a very trying pattern—in two drabs: the carpet rather more trying in yellows and browns, with this advantage, that its pattern was almost worn threadbare and pleasantly effaced. The window drapery was of similar hue to the paper, and muslin curtains, drawn partially across, had become reduced by dust and smoke to the same subdued color.

There were one or two striking portraits (family ones, probably) on the walls, and a yet more striking stove-pipe ornament in the grate. I forget further details.

The landlady was elderly and limp, with a sort of washed-out and plaintive aspect and a tendency to sigh and fold her hands. She was very attentive, however, and anxious to show her "first floor" to the best advantage.

"The curtains will wash?" said I, looking around.

"Dear, yes, sir, surely! We was lettin' 'em hang to save the others, which the sun fades 'em so, being the worst of stuffs and such like. Like all earthly things, as fade mostly, don't they, sir?"

The landlady sighed gently, and folded her hands again. She wore black worsted mittens.

"I hope," I said in my polite way, "you don't mind my naming it—but, of course, your—ahem—the bed—is free, you know—from—from any little annoyances?"

I had had my experience—preceding those three years of paradise and Mrs. Chick—and I was nervous, partly from dread of the indignation I had before aroused in the housekeeping breast by the above delicate question and partly from the recollection of results that had followed on the assurance of landladies of another class that their knowledge of natural history did not extend to the species alluded to, and that they were at fault to comprehend my meaning.

Mrs. Maudle (that was her name) adopted neither of these extremes; she only shook her head pensively and said: "To my knowledge there ain't a living flea in this house;" (I didn't mean fleas, though) "but you know, sir, we live in a vale of tears, and in course there will be such trials for all at times. If I am so tried, I hope to bear it meekly."

And I think Mrs. Maudle shed a tear.

"I am very glad to hear it," said I, cheerfully; "now about terms, if I arrange to come."

"Oh, don't speak of terms, sir; I'm sure what you've been in the habit of paying will suit us, or less, maybe, as it's more for the keepin' of the rooms aired, bein' as the house is too big for us, and the protection of havin' a gent like yourself under our roof, Mandle bein' low in his nerves of late years and myself haven't that sperrit as some have, which I'm sure, sir, anything we can do to make you comfortable and feel at home, as there's no place like ——"

"Ah! thank you—thank you."

The light—when the windows were cleaned—would suit my work, the exchequer was somewhat low, time was an object, and, taking all in all, I closed with my obliging landlady's terms, which gave her much pensive satisfaction.

"And if you'll be pleased to name your wishes, sir, in all respects," said Mrs. Maudle, with a faint sigh in conclusion, "we hope to do our humble best to meet 'em."

"You're very good," said I; "don't think you'll find me exacting; I confess to a few weaknesses. I dislike damp and smoky potatoes. I object to hot dinner on a cold plate, and I'm partial to clean linen. That's about all, I think."

Mrs. Maudle readily acquiesced in these modest requirements, observing that "a hangel couldn't want less," and thereupon we parted.

In due time myself and my few belongings were conveyed in a cab to 132 Peckover street. I had dined, and, beyond a cup of coffee, wanted nothing. Mrs. Maudle brought me the coffee herself.

"I'm sure, sir, I hope it's as you like," said she, meekly; "but, if not, you'll kindly name it, and Sophonisba will bring you your water at any hour you'll mention in the mornin', sir. Sophonisba Ann mostly waits on lodgers, sir (that's my daughter), and I'm sure always willin', though that timid and soft-hearted – but there! don't mind me, a sayin', as a mother, perhaps more than I had ought respectin' my own."

I said I was much obliged to her and her daughter for their kind intentions, and wished her good night. She sighed audibly, and held the door handle for another minute, then, with an air of resignation, retired.

Morning brought breakfast and Sophonisba Ann. This young person was, if possible, meeker and more depressed than her parent. She carried her head a little on one side and sniffed with every breath as if from chronic influenza. Her complexion was pale, not to say pasty, and her hair and eyebrows whity-brown. Sophonisba Ann's figure was remarkable for depression where fullness might be expected and a curious bulging tendency wherever the opposite effect was usual. Her attire was chiefly notable for hooks and eyes—with a difference of opinion that materially hindered friendship, and refractory hair-pins, which I found had a way of dropping out into all sorts of odd places. I found one, one day, at the bottom of my jug of porter, at dinner!

This interesting young person contrived to make a surprising clatter with the breakfast ware, upset a chair and threw down a pile of my books before making her exit. I attributed this to the timidity which her mother had assured me was counterbalanced by so many virtues, and could not in reason, complain; but when, in removing the breakfast things, the same pile of books underwent precisely the same fate, and gave me such a start that I nearly cut off a finger in mending a pen, I could not help saying, rather brusquely: "For heaven's sake, my good girl, be careful what you do next," which produced quite an attack of sniffing and a hasty retreat on the part of the unlucky maiden.

A little later in the day, my landlady knocked timidly at my door.

"Come in," said I.

She came in, folding her hands and looking up at the ceiling.

"I'm sure, sir, you'll excuse it, though a liberty, but as I'm a mother, which it's nothing arter all, and I've no call to worrit, I'm certain, but its my daughter, sir, a takin' on so after you spoke to her this mornin', and if you'd be so very kind, seein' as Sophonisba Ann is so tender-hearted"——

"What is it about?" I said, as the tearful lady paused to take breath. "I don't understand."

"Oh! and I am sure you didn't mean for to hurt her feelin's, sir, and she owns it; she's said as much in that kitchen down below to me. 'His way seemed harsh,' she says, 'but his heart's in the right place,' she says; 'I'm certain sure of it,' she says, and she's been a cryin' her eyes out, which Sophonisba Ann is rather 'sterica at times, sir; and I'm a mother, with, I hope, a mother's feelin's, as you'll excuse; but there, don't mind me, sir. I tell her I'm sure you don't mean nothink, and likely it won't so occur again."

"Bless me?" said I, "this is very foolish; of course I didn't mean to hurt your daughter's feelings, ma'am; pray tell her so; I'll remember to speak less abruptly since you've named it."

She almost wept at this.

"Oh! sir, you're the most feelin' gent as ever I did see, I'm sure, I don't know whatever my gurl'll say—and the last gent we had so different—so wiolent in his language; not to speak of banging the door. O dear! what it is to have a sperret, which is what me and mine never had, and so the world tramples on us," said Mrs. Maudle.

"I hope not," said I. "You should take a more cheerful view of life, Mrs. Maudle."

I was very busy and wished she would go, but she didn't.

"Well, sir," she observed with a sigh, "I always was one of the down-hearted ones: and Maudle's nerves that low! I never shall forget when he asked me to have him that's seven-and-twenty-year-ago—'Mariar,' he says to me (that's my name)—"but there, sir, don't mind me, which as a wife I hope I have a wife's feelin's;" and Mrs. Maudle shed tears.

I did mind her very much, and devoutly wished her at the North Pole, as she stood in the doorway wiping her eyes with her apron, and evidently awaiting my sympathy.

"I'm sure Mr. Maudle's choice does him credit," I said, desperately, "he couldn't have done better than take a good wife to soothe the path of life for him; wasn't that your door bell?"

"Sophonisba Ann will answer the door, sir, which I think you was mistaken, and it didn't ring," said Mrs. Maudle. "I'm sure I never did meet with a gentleman so thoughtful and feelin'; a real friend, as one may say, already, and I'm only thankful"——

"I'm afraid I must trouble you to shut that door, Mrs. Maudle," I gasped. "I'm subject to ear-ache, and the draught"—I hope I shall be forgiven for the fibs that woman caused me to invent. She slowly withdrew, murmuring motherly compassion, and faintly suggested pepper plasters, and other mild remedies for ear-ache, while I took up my pen and tried to collect my scattered ideas.

I had not seen Mr. Maudle, the state of whose "nerves" kept him mostly confined to an arm-chair in the kitchen, but from occasional sounds of melody, something like feebly rendered choruses of a jovial nature, in which a slight confusion of consonants was perceptible, I concluded that even Mr. M. had intervals of comparative cheerfulness. Moreover, I discovered that there was a son of the house—a tall youth with whitey-brown hair and skin and a stoop in his shoulders—whose avocation seemed to be near at hand, by his punctual return to meals at stated hours in the day. With this young man I was fated, alas! too soon to become acquainted.

One evening, a little before my dinner, Mrs. Maudle waited on me with an air of meek mystery to ask if her son might "step up by-and-by" and speak to me, if so be that I had no objection.

His name, his mother told me, was Cincinnatus. he was rather low-spirited, and had, in fact, something on his mind.

"Dear me!" I said, "poor fellow! any trouble? Nothing serious, I hope?"

"Oh, dear, no, sir—leastwise, nothing wrong. Cin's as innocent as the babe unborn, as to evil ways, sir; no, it's the mind, that's where it is;" (mysteriously) "he's got a soarin' mind, sir, and the world's too little for him."

"Indeed?" said I, mentally regretting that the young gentleman had selected me as the confidant of his mental trials; but, alas! I little guessed what was to come. Scarcely was the cloth removed when a modest rap announced my new acquaintance, and Cincinnatus entered, bearing a huge brown paper parcel, which he deposited with a jerk on the table, violently shaking back a long wisp of hair which kept falling rebelliously into his eyes, and sinking immediately into the first chair near, with an air of profound dejection.

This young man had a large nose of the solid Roman type, very red eyelids, and a sonorous voice with a twang in it. He told me he was in an attorney's office, but that the work was very distasteful to him, and he had thoughts of giving it up and turning author.

He had begun several works of importance, one of which (his "chef douver," he called it) he had brought up with him.

"Blank verse mostly, sir," he explained; "in ten books, revealing the mysteries of a human soul to the moon, who is supposed to be listening—poetical license, of course—you understand. The first three books——"

"Isn't it a risk," interrupted I, shrinking from the prospect of being pressed into the same service as the moon, and resolved to be as practical as possible, "isn't it a risk to give up steady work for an uncertainty in literature?"

"Well, sir, mother talks like that, and she's right, and you're right in one point of view," said the youth, meekly; "but when you've a soul, and when your soul mounts beyond the office stool, where are you then?"

He waved his hand descriptively, as it were, of an aerial flight; his nails were inky, and very long.

"Well, I don't know," said I,—"but hadn't you better——?"

But he had risen, and hurridly commenced undoing the brown paper, withdrawing from it about fifty sheets of foolscap, well written over.

"Listen!" he cried oracularly, and slowly recited as follows:

Hail! cold, unfeeling orb, tho' thy bright ray
Mocks the absorbing madness of my soul!
Soon, soon thy last quarter will draw nigh;
But sooner still for me the funeral bells toll!

"That's the opening lines," said he; "the next——"

"My friend," I said, "I am afraid you will find the public hard to satisfy; you must look for disappointment."

"That's all I look for," he interrupted, "that and an early grave," he added, with a certain air of satisfaction. "And as mother and father aren't as well off as they were, I dare say there won't ever be a recordin' marble to tell the world Cincinnatus Maudle lies below—but that's of no consequence."

He sighed.

"Aren't you a little out of health?" I asked at this point.

"Oh, yes, sir." I'm journeying to the tomb. I've no sort of a doubt about it myself, but the cold world will pass heedless by and think nothing of it. The world's so very sublunary! Don't you find it so, sir?"

"Well, yes: I suppose it is that," I said, never having had cause to doubt it as a fact. "Yes, I suppose it is. But now let me advise you as a friend."

He looked up softly.

"I knew you would," he cried; "that's just it, you will assist me, and I'll step up of evenings and we'll go through it together gradual like. Yes, I felt sure you'd be the friend to do it; when mother said: 'Cin, that's our first floor going out,' I felt as if I could open my heart to you like a brother; I did, indeed, sir."

"Look here," I said, when he paused and shook back the excited wisp of whitey-brown hair, with joyful vehemence; "look here, I'll let you know when to bring it up. The fact is, I'm awfully busy just now; I haven't a minute to spare for study or the delights of the muse."

I smiled grimly as I almost pushed him out of the door, bearing his precious brown paper parcel and overwhelming me with undeserved thanks. Inwardly I resolved never to have five minutes' leisure to listen to those "revelations to the moon" which would henceforth haunt my waking and sleeping hours, even should the meek Cincinnatus sink into his early grave the sooner, for lack of brotherly sympathy.

The next morning when I entered my sitting-room Sophonisba Ann was there, a little belated, I concluded, as she was finishing the operation of dusting, which I never observed to produce much result. Something in the street had caught the damsel's notice, for she did not observe my entrance as she stood with her hands on her hips, the duster hanging idly by her side, her mouth open, and vacantly fixed eyes; the refractory hair-pins in open rebellion, and stray wisps and tails of hair obtruding where they were off duty; while the hooks and eyes at variance completed the effect of the bulgy lines of Sophonisba Ann's figure before hinted at

Now, it happened that I was engaged in making a series of sketches for a comic journal, and Sophonisba Ann, as she now stood, was the very model I wanted for one of them. The opportunity was too good to be lost. I seized paper and pencil.

"One moment, my good girl!" I cried. "Stay as you are—oblige me by not moving."

Of course she did not stay "as she was," but nearly enough so to enable me throw on paper the outline which had caught my fancy.

"Thanks—that will do," I said as blandly as I could.

She simpered and actually forgot to sniffle.

"La, sir! whatever could you take me like this for?" she cried at last. "If I'd only been in my afternoon frock at least, and done my hair up a bit tidy if you had told me; but la! now."

"Don't name it," I said; "I'd rather not, in fact. I wanted you just as you are."

The next evening Mrs. Maudle came up smiling—yes, actually smiling!—with a cheerful serenity, if not a little excitement in her demeanor, as she placed before me a photographic likeness of Sophonisba Ann.

"Which Maudle and me, sir, couldn't hear of your puttin' up with such a sketch like, all of a hurry; and bein' as our gurl wasn't tidied up, as she'd a wished, in course, as Sophonisba Ann's been and had this took at Mr. Laubley's round the corner, if you'll accept it; and I'm sure a good-hearted, well-disposed gurl is my gurl, though I say it, and not took up with follies like some, and that steady, almost too steady for her station in life, as her father tells her; and I'm sure both her father and me—but there, sir, when you're a parent you'll know what a parent's feelin's are."

All this was said in one breath, without any pause whatever. I sat bewildered, wondering whether it would be unpardonably rude to reject the offer of a lady's portrait, and what I could say in excuse.

"I'm afraid," I began—"you're very kind—the fact is—I think I didn't make myself quite understood."

"Oh, yes, sir, you did. Pray don't name it. You was all a gentleman should be; and Maudle and me are proud"—here Mrs. Maudle, without proceeding further, conveyed herself downstairs, in a tremendous condition between tears and smiles that fairly stunned me. What could the stupid people think I wanted with their daughter's likeness? I stuck it on the mantelpiece (it was not a very flattering photograph), resolving to take no more notice of the thing; but the next time Miss Maudle came up I observed she wore a flaring red ribbon in her hair and an assertive brooch in the front of her dress. She stole furtive glances at the mantelpiece, half shy, half simpering. I caught her eye by chance, when, overcoming her maidenly modesty, with a preliminary sniffle, she said, sweetly: "Oh, if you please, sir, about walkin' out on Sundays after chapel; for mother's quite agreeable, bein' as you're such a gentleman, and"—

"What do you mean?" I said, sharply enough, and quite forgetting the "tender heartedness" of Sophonisba Ann in the excess of my bewilderment; but, instead of answering me, that young person flew to the window, crying: "If there isn't that man a-crossing the street again. Oh! whatever'll father do? But Cin is at the door, and you'll protect poor father, I know!" and she rushed downstairs without further explanation.

Another minute and rapid—it must be added, stumbling footsteps began ascending the stairs, accompanied by the cries of Sophonisba Ann and the fainter sobs of her mother in the rear, and Mr. Maudle entered, supported by his son and closely followed by a rough-and-ready looking person with a paper in his hand.

I stared.

Mr. Maudle waved his hand.

"I—I—My dear friend—Sir—'Scuse—abrupt visits," he cried, in a hazy sort of voice. "F—friends may—waive sheremony."

Here Mr. Maudle swerved suddenly, but Cincinnatus propped him up again.

"And I—I believe I'm correct in saying a f—friend in need is a friend indeed." (This very rapidly spoken). "Under these shircumstance, I—I'm bound to forego a parent's feelings"——

"Yes, Maudle, that's it," cried Mrs. M., from behind the apron she held to her eyes: "we know what you'd say—what we'd both say, and feel likewise—and thank our stars as sent you, sir, to our aid, which I'm sure we can never repay, as it's £15 17s. 7d."——

"£14 17s. 7d.," interrupted the rough-and-ready-looking person, with a hoarse cough.

"Yes, take her, take my child, and bless you!" cried Mr. Maudle, extending his arm like the "heavy father" in a play, "and tell thish—minion of the law, that—that his claim shatisfied and her helpless, aged parents saved from—ruin and—dishtresh!"

Here Mr. Maudle broke off, weeping.

"Happy day!" said Cincinnatus, "I said you were like a brother when first I saw you, and I'll put it all in my great work, that an hollow-hearted world may read and be ashamed of not doing likewise!" with which rather ambiguous speech Cincinnatus again dutifully propped up his swaying parent, whose emotions were too much for him.

"May you both—be—happy!" murmured Mr. Maudle.

"O la, father," cried Sophonisba Ann, hysterically.

"What does it all mean?" I was forced to ask the bearer of the mysterious paper, who was the only coherent one of the party.

"Why, sir, this here's a distress for the sum of £14 17s. 7d. owing to the parties as sent me here; and the old gent, he says—leastwise he don't seem to know exactly what he's sayin' half his time—he says as you're goin' to marry his daughter and pay up square, but I ain't goin' to be gammoned no more, so if so be, sir, of course I have your word as well as his'n"——

I waited for no more. "Gracious alive!" I exclaimed, "are you all idiots or lunatics, or what? Grant me my senses to get clear of this! Here, take the rent—take a month over for the notice—only let me be gone!" And flinging the money on the table, I rushed to collect my traps, thrusting the things into bag and portmanteau as if for life or death, and never pausing till I strode forth—minus two pairs of boots, an umbrella and cigar case, left behind in the hurry—in search of the first friendly cab which should bear me far from the region of Peckover street to any destination under the sun rather than consign me in future to the tender mercies of a "Meek Family."—Home Chimes.

Our Very Own.

What can be more beneficent than that dispensation of Providence which gives us all so deep an interest in our own concerns? What we do ourselves always possesses for us an attraction which no one else's work, be it ever so brilliant and successful, can command. The writer of these lines will look upon them with a fatherly interest which nothing can justify, save that divine sentiment of appreciation for our own with which we are all imbued. He will turn forthwith this present page and read it appreciatingly from beginning to end, noting every typographical error, and recognizing with a shade of irritation the places where the editor al pruning-knife has left its marks.

Others may perhaps read it, but to none of them will it seem to be surrounded with the halo which it wears in the author's eyes. The only other mortals for which it has a personal interest will be the compositors who set it up, and they will look at it merely with a professional eye, each felicitating himself on the even spacing and the ingenious way, perhaps, in which he avoided an awkward division of a word at the end of a line. The editor who read it in manuscript will never look at it in type if he can help it. He will turn to his own paragraphs and find in them the solace that is his just reward. I fancy every one who has put pen to paper in the production of this number of The Hour will turn to his own work. He may not think it better than the rest, but it is his very own, and for him it has fascinations. Then there is the printer, who will turn over the leaves and think that his part of the work is conspicuously meritorious. The man who furnished the ink will admire its glossy blackness. The paper maker will rub a leaf between his fore-finger and thumb, and hold it admiringly up to the light, to note its texture. The advertising agent will contemplate his own peculiar pages with something like affection, and each individual advertiser when he receives it will think that his own peculiar lines, squares or pages ought to catch the eye of the public, even if nothing else in the edition is so much as glanced at. Such are some of the personal interests that go to the making up of a single publication. They are referred to here because they are nearest at hand. All the interests of life, however, afford parallel instances.—The Hour.

Commercial Value of Metals.

The following table serves for a general comparison of the values which include in addition to the tabulated lathanium, tantalum, thorium and Caesium—not yet articles of commerce. As yet the world's supply of some is less than a pound:

PRICE PER AVOIRDUPOIS POUND.

Vanadium	$10,000 00	Gold	$326 00
Rubidium	9,070 00	Molybdenum	226 00
Zirconium	7,200 00	Thallium	225 00
Lithium	7,000 00	Platinum	150 00
Glucinum	5,400 00	Manganese	130 00
Calcium	4,500 00	Tungsten	115 00
Strontium	4,200 00	Magnesium	64 00
Terbium	4,080 00	Potassium	64 00
Yttrium	4,080 00	Aluminum	32 00
Erbium	3,400 00	Silver	20 00
Cerium	3,400 00	Cobalt	16 00
Didymium	3,200 00	Sodium	8 00
Indium	3,200 00	Nickle	5 00
Ruthenium	2,400 00	Cadmium	4 00
Rhodium	2,300 00	Bismuth	2 50
Niobium	2,300 00	Mercury	95
Barium	1,800 00	Arsenic	50
Palladium	1,400 00	Tin	25
Osmium	1,308 00	Copper	25
Iridium	1,090 00	Antimony	16
Uranium	900 00	Zinc	11
Titanium	680 00	Lead	08
Chromium	560 00	Iron	02

A glance at the foregoing list shows that gold is no longer the type of extreme preciousness in the metallic world. While gold is worth a few hundred dollars a pound, many other metals run into the thousands, and some day, when such current prices are better known, the figures of speech relating to value may undergo some changes; for instance we may some day use zirconium as a unit of preciousness, and speak of "good fellows" as worth their weight in vanadium.

CURES OF RHEUMATISM AND SCIATICA.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y., March 3, 1884.

I am a boat-builder living at Peekskill, New York. I have been greatly troubled during the past winter with Rheumatism in my back and shoulder. I have used ALLCOCK'S PLASTERS and they always relieve the pain. I have used other plasters recommended by friends, but I find ALLCOCK'S decidedly the best. We have used them in the family for some years, and would not be without them.

WM. R. OSBORN.

CROTON LANDING, New York, Jan. 21, 1884.

This will certify that BRANDRETH'S PILLS and ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS cured me of a very severe attack of sciatica. I was taken with this severe pain on January 4, 1881, and, having tried various remedies without benefit, I bethought me of the above named medicines. I took two pills every night at bed-time, and put five ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS on my limbs. I had not used them over three days before I felt great relief, and in thirty days I was completely cured. They took all the rheumatism out of my system. Thanking God first, and you secondly, I am truly yours, etc.,

BUSINESS MEN

Risking Health and Life—Statement of a Well-Known Official of Lowell, Mass.—Chronic Kidney Disease Cured by Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y.

"I must have other help or die," exclaimed City Assessor Francis Goward, of Sumner street, Lowell, Mass., to his physician. Like so many other public men, Mr. Goward was in early life strong, stalwart and a perfect stranger to physical infirmities. But the excitements of a busy life, and the nervous strain caused by business engagements, together, perhaps, with some inherited tendency (for the tendency is often inherited) had made him, he says, "as most of my friends in Lowell are aware, a great sufferer from kidney troubles. As a matter of course I procured the best of medical attendance, but without real benefit." He also had inflammation of the prostate gland. Utterly discouraged, he invested a dollar in DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, of Rondout, N. Y. That was two or three years ago. Under date of Feb. 13, 1884, he says: "My health is the best it has been for years. I still use FAVORITE REMEDY occasionally. I always keep it in the house. I have had many letters of inquiry about my case, and I always recommend it as one of the best of medicines for such troubles, for I have used most all other medicines for similar troubles without benefit." Such an emphatic endorsement from such a source ought to be perfectly convincing to all sufferers. Dr. Kennedy has used FAVORITE REMEDY in his practice for twenty years. It is purely vegetable, non-alcoholic, safe, sure, efficient if taken as directed. Try it.

TROUBLE IN LOUISIANA.

Two Batteries of Artillery in Readiness to Preserve the Peace,

The Difficulty About a Judgeship—Attempt to Burn the Court-house of St. Martin's Parish.

NEW ORLEANS, May 24.—To-day the Adjutant General ordered a battalion of the Washington Artillery and a battalion of the Louisiana Field Artillery to hold themselves in readiness to move at a moment's notice to the scene of the trouble in New Iberia. The military, however, are not yet ordered to move. It is understood there is considerable excitement in New Iberia, growing out of the contest for the Judgeship in the Twenty-first Judicial District between Gates, claiming to have been elected, and Fontellieu, the present incumbent. A Times-Democrat's New Iberia special says: It seems that the reports concerning the political situation in this and St. Martin Parishes are very much exaggerated. So far there has been no disturbance, except a few weeks ago, when a crowd of hoodlums, composed of Fontellieu's backers, paraded the streets at night, firing cannon and pistols, and making threats that they would spill the last drop of their blood in seating Fontellieu. The past two weeks have been quiet, but all sorts of rumors are afloat. One is to the effect that Fontellieu is organizing negroes to attend and help to resist the seating of Gates. Exciting rumors have run high for the past two days, the cause of which is supposed to be the forming of a militia company. In St. Martin's Parish things are about as here. An attempt yesterday to burn the Court-house of St. Martin's Parish caused some commotion. There is a great deal of talk throughout both parishes. The object in firing the Court-house is unknown. But little damage was done. These rumors did great damage to the business of New Iberia. Country people are afraid to come to town. They think war is going on among us. One hundred men of the Washington Artillery start to-morrow with one field piece and small arms, with orders to report to Judge Gates at Iberia. Other troops are ordered in readiness. Dispatches to-night from New Iberia and St. Martinsville report absolute quiet at those places. Communication by wire with Baton Rouge is cut off to-night. No particulars of the immediate cause of ordering troops to Bayou Teche are received, but the impression is that they are to be used for the purpose of overawing the opposition to Judge Gates' installation.

Great Oil Fire.

PHILADELPHIA, May 24.—The fire in the Atlantic Oil Works spread during the night and is still sweeping over the works. A dozen storage tanks burnt. Efforts are being made to run off the oil in the tanks. The paraffine works, consisting of several brick buildings were destroyed. All the oil property at Point Breeze is considered in peril. The tug Stokley is aiding the Fire Department from the river front. Application has been made to General Hartranft to send a detail of the Keystone Battery to blow up the tanks of the Belmont Works, to save property and prevent the fire spreading to the gas-works. At noon fourteen tanks of oil were ablaze and several more in great danger. The flames spread over five acres, and are likely to continue to burn for several days. The firemen feel confident that they can keep it confined to the oil now burning. Since 4 o'clock this morning several explosions have occurred. A change in the wind may spread the flames. It is now said the loss will reach $600,000. At midnight the situation at the oil fire is practically unchanged. Late this afternoon the twenty-five-thousand-barrel tank took fire, and cannon were at once fired into it. Several holes were made in the tank, a twelve-pound projectile from a naval howitzer tearing the whole flange from the center. The oil poured out in torrents, and the battery men and firemen were obliged to run from the burning fluid and leave the guns to be destroyed. The oil then burned without doing other damage. The heavens were illuminated during the night by several tanks bubbling over. The fire will be apt to burn several days yet.

Crusade Against Piano-Playing.

LONDON, May 24.—A crusade against piano-playing has begun in Berlin. The promoters of the crusade have circulated petitions for signature in all the residence portions of the city, and the petitions, which have a very large number of signers, have now been presented to the municipal and police authorities. They set forth that the constant and monotonous practicing of scales and exercises by piano pupils has become an intolerable nuisance, causing much suffering to invalids, aggravating all forms of nervous diseases, and depreciating the value of real estate. They therefore claim that it is a proper subject for police regulation, and pray that a municipal ordinance be enacted restricting the time of piano playing and practicing to the hours between 11 a. m. and 12 noon, and between 8 and 11 p. m.

An Interesting Decision.

PITTSBURG, PA., May 23.—The question as to the power of a sheriff to levy upon whisky in bond was finally decided to-day in the United States Court here. A rule was granted in the Common Pleas Court of this county against Frank P. Case, Collector of Internal Revenue, to show cause why he should not be held for contempt for refusing to allow the Sheriff of this county to levy upon whisky in a bonded warehouse. Judge Atchison, with the concurrence of Justice Bradley, of the United States Supreme Court, before whom the rule had been certioraried, discharged the case at the costs of the Sheriff, and sustained the Collector in his action.

A Suspended Bank Resumes.

PITTSBURG, PENN., May 23.—The doors of the Penn Bank opened at 2 o'clock to-day, and were kept open until five this evening, in order to gratify all demands. Long before that hour the run had ceased, and it is expected when they open to-morrow the scare will be over, and business will proceed the same as before the suspension. Deposits to-day are said to be $50,000 in excess of the amount withdrawn.

UNDER THE WAVES.

A French Brig With Fifty-three Passengers and Nine of a Crew Sinks and all on Board are Lost.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., May 23.—The French brig Senorine, with fifty-three passengers and nine of a crew, sunk to the eastward of the Great Banks and all perished. She left St. Malo, France, on the 5th of March, laden with a general cargo bound to St. Pierre, and succumbed to the gale of the 5th of May.

Another Bank Suspends.

NEW YORK, May 24.—There was a small run on the West Side Savings Bank this afternoon, growing out of the $96,000 defalcation of Hinckley, the paying teller. A crowd of depositors flocked in and drew their money. Many only drew a portion. Cashier Dobler refused to speak of the bank or its affairs. At 1:30 p. m. the bank suspended and Dobler's silence was explained. President George Moore says they closed because the American Exchange refused to clear for them. He said further that they had plenty of money to stand the run all day, but that he wanted to treat all the depositors fairly. The books are being examined by two bank examiners. The president says that they will have their statement ready shortly. This bank paid no interest. The directors and officers of the bank were in the building all day, but refused to talk about the suspension. All kinds of rumors were about in regard to Hinckley's defalcation. One was that Hinckley did not content himself with $96,000. Hinckley has not been heard from yet. President Moore said that he was sure that after the books had been thoroughly examined no greater amount than $96,000 would be found missing, and that a resumption of business will take place shortly. When the notice was given that the bank had suspended, the depositors turned away. On the closed doors was posted the following notice: "With deepest sorrow we have to announce the suspension of this bank. A statement will be prepared at once. Depositors will be paid in full. We hope to resume again, and merit a continuance of your past favors."

Fatal Boiler Explosion.

DUBUQUE, IA., May 24.—A terrible boiler accident occurred here this afternoon, two of three boilers in the sash and door factory of Carr, Ryder & Wheeler exploding with terrible force, and the boiler-house was completely destroyed. A solid division wall separated the boiler-house from the mill, else the destruction and loss of life would have been terrible. The mill employs two hundred men. A corner of a dwelling, near the boiler-house, was torn completely out and several women injured. The engineer and two firemen were in the engine-house at the time, and were buried beneath the debris. Two children, playing near it, were also buried. The following are the killed: Milo M. Mallen, engineer, aged thirty, leaves a wife. Fritz Villdanger, fireman, single, and two children of Charles May, aged six and three. Michael McLaughlin, second fireman, horribly burned and mangled, and can not live. Mrs. Margaret Walter, struck by flying bricks and badly cut; her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Albert Walter, and her three children, also injured. Mrs. Lear and Mrs. Vogler, in the same dwelling, were also hurt. It is not thought that any other bodies were under the debris than those of the engineer and firemen. The loss on the building is estimated at $5,000, fully insured. The proprietors are at a loss to know the reason of the explosion, but it is ascribed to low water in the boilers, which were carrying a full head of steam.

Hinckley's Haul.

NEW YORK, May 23.—Charles A. Hinckley, paying teller of the West Side Bank, at Eighth avenue and Thirty-fourth street, has embezzled $96,000 of the bank's funds and decamped. The embezzlement was discovered Wednesday last. Hinckley did not appear at the bank on Wednesday morning, and not answering to the summons sent to his house, it was suspected that something was wrong. The books were overhauled, and a large deficit detected. The bank officers certify that the capital stock of $200,000 is intact, and that there is a surplus of $100,182. There is to be added to this surplus bonds $10,000 of the paying teller, given by the Fidelity and Indemnity Company. The matter was kept secret until the investigation by the officers was finished. Hinckley has been connected with the bank as the paying teller ever since its organization, fifteen years ago. He was regarded as a man of the most rigid integrity.

For the Confederate Home.

BALTIMORE, May 24.—A meeting in behalf of the effort to establish a home in Richmond, Va., for disabled and destitute Confederate soldiers was held at Ford's Opera-house to-night. Governor McLain presided. Speeches were made by Speaker Carlisle, Senator Colquitt, of Georgia; Representatives Calkins, of Indiana; Goff, of West Virginia; Herbert, of Alabama; Curtin, of Pennsylvania; Skinner, of New York; McGinnis, of Montana, and General Fitz Hugh Lee. A letter of regret at his inability to attend was received from General Rosecrans. Next week performances begin at Ford's Opera-house for the benefit of the home.

Winter Wheat in Illinois.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., May 23.—The condition of the winter wheat crop in Illinois May 1, as reported by the State Board of Agriculture, is better in the northern portion but not so promising in the southern portion. The percentage of area of winter wheat killed is 14 per cent. in the northern portion, central division, 20 per cent.; southern division, 27 per cent. The average yield is now estimated at 94 per cent. in the northern counties, 86 in the central counties and 73 in the southern counties. The southern division represents half the acreage of the State, which makes the average of the State about 82 per cent. of the average crop.

Relics of Thomas Carlyle.

LONDON, May 24.—The house in which Thomas Carlyle was born at Ecclefechon, in Dumfriesshire, Scotland, has been purchased by members of his family, who have had it repaired, cleaned and painted. Many relics of the great essayist and historian have been deposited in the house, and it is proposed to admit visitors to view them, admirers of Carlyle believing that the same success will attend the undertaking as has come to Shakespeare's house at Stratford-on-Avon.

TERRIBLE COLLISION.

A Train Making a Siding Run Into by An Express.

Two Passenger Coaches Smashed to Kindling Wood—Four Passengers Killed, and Seven Wounded, One Possibly Fatally.

SAVANNAH, N. Y., May 25.—Train No. 54 due here at 9:33, was to meet extra No. 51 at Savannah. The train from the west came down at the rate of thirty miles an hour, and struck the westbound train, which had not got on the side-track, completely demolishing one coach and part of another, killing and wounding the following: Walter H. Waterbury, of New York. John Wright, of Savannah, N. Y. Michael Dooley, of Rochester. Joseph Boyce, of Rochester. The injured are: Nicholas Engler, of Rochester, right leg. Mathew Buckley, of Rochester, right thigh broken. Henry W. Sherman, internal injuries and scalp wounds. George Roberts of Rochester, chest bruised and internal injuries. William Acton, of Rochester, hand injured. S. W. Pitts, of Lyons, N. Y., slightly bruised and cut over the right eye. John O. Breedy of Rochester, fracture of the right leg and internal injuries. The wreck was cleared this morning. The two coaches were so badly smashed that they were made into fire wood. The wounded were taken to Savannah. All are doing well with one exception. The train was passing from the main track to the siding to allow the express to pass, when the express came along at the rate of thirty miles an hour. The engine struck the two rear cars, completely demolishing them.

Killed on His Wedding Eve.

CLEVELAND, O., May 25.—Max Leinhardt, a young man of thirty-two, came to this city three years ago with $12,000 in his possession. He obtained employment and by economy increased his possessions, and a year ago began looking about here for a wife. He made the acquaintance of a charming young lady living at the neighboring village of Parma, and an engagement followed. The wedding day was fixed for Thursday last. On Wednesday, in company with a friend named Franz Schmit, the prospective bridegroom left Cleveland to drive to Parma. When about ten miles from the city the horse took fright and ran away, throwing both the young men to the ground. Leinhardt, who was fondly dreaming of his marriage on the morrow, was badly injured. His spine was broken, and he died in a few minutes in the arms of his friend, Schmit. The young lady who was to have married Leinhardt, is frantic over the tragic death of her affianced.

Murdered by His Insane Wife.

TOLEDO, O., May 25.—A Commercial telegram from Bowling Green says: George Anderson, farmer, aged seventy-five, was beaten to death this morning with a hickory cane, by his wife, aged sixty-five. His head was beaten to a jelly. Mrs. Anderson is a large, powerful woman, and has been in the insane asylum twice. She was evidently insane when the deed was done. She has a brother, David Phillips, now in the insane asylum at Columbus, who killed Charles Lunday several years ago, while insane. Mrs. Anderson was lodged in jail here.

Philadelphia Oil Fire Still Burning.

PHILADELPHIA, May 25.—The fire at the oil works of the Atlantic Refining Company continues to burn, but it is thought the danger is now past. Early this morning three tanks, containing forty thousand barrels of oil, exploded, but the oil burned itself out without doing further damage, and to-night only one tank, containing fourteen thousand barrels, was in flames. The estimate to-day places the loss at about $400,000.

An Inhuman Father.

NEW YORK, May 25.—Four children, the eldest aged eight years, were found locked in a hut, near Nowtown, L. I., where they had been left by their father without food or drink. The mother of the children subjected them to a similar experience last winter, and then mysteriously disappeared. A warrant was issued for the arrest of the father, John Kines.

Distressing Accident.

FINDLAY, O., May 25.—By the upsetting of a wagon containing parties attending the laying of a corner-stone of the Findlay College to-day, Mrs. Taylor was fatally injured, Mrs. W. Messenger had an eye knocked out, Mrs. John Beckelhaupt was injured internally, and a number of others were severely bruised.

An Insane Mother.

ST. LOUIS, May 25.—Mrs. Alexander Edmont, of St. Louis, wife of a railway engineer, becoming suddenly insane, cut the throats of her three little children and then her own. Two of the children are dead, but the third will recover. The mother's wounds are probably fatal.

A Defaulter's Return.

ERIE, PA., May 25.—Adam Brabender, President of the defunct Savings Bank, has returned. He admits that he and the cashier lost $100,000 in grain and oil speculation, and that he in addition took funds of the bank to pay his private debts. He was arrested and is now in jail.

Baptist Missionary Union.

DETROIT, May 25.—At the closing meeting of the Missionary Union Saturday night, after a long and solemn deliberation, it was voted to begin missionary work on the Congo River, in Africa, at a cost of not less than $30,000 per annum.

—Emma Abbott said to a Philadelphia Times reporter: "I never take cold, though I'm as afraid of a draught as I am of a mad dog. There are some singers who just beg a cold to come and take hold of them, but I'm not one of them. The coldest day in winter I ride in an open carriage—Nilsson told me about that—but always alone, for talking in the open air is death to a singer."

—The United States has become the fourth largest beer-drinking nation in the world.—Chicago Herald.

A bill was passed providing for the payment ($300,000) of quarter-master claims, one-half of which goes to Tennessee, and the evening session was devoted to the pension bills.

WASHINGTON, May 24.—SENATE.—Senate not in session.

HOUSE.—Mr. Hatch (Mo.) presented the conference report on the bill to establish a Bureau of Animal Industry. The amount of appropriation is $150,000, and the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Agriculture is limited to such investigation and such disinfection and quarantine measures as may be necessary to prevent the spread of contagious and infectious diseases from one State or Territory into another, and is prohibited from applying any money toward paying for animals it is found necessary to slaughter in order to prevent a spread of the disease. The report was agreed to. Under a special order of the House this day was assigned to measures called up by the Committee on Naval Affairs. The first bill called up was a Senate bill granting permission to L. K. Reynolds, of the U. S. Navy, to accept the decoration of the Royal and Imperial Order of Francis Joseph from the Government of Austria for gallantry in saving the lives of eleven Austrian sailors, which gave rise to considerable debate. The bill passed. The next bill, restoring Alfred Hopkins to the rank of Captain in the navy, gave rise to a long debate. [Hopkins is the officer who left Pensacola without leave when the yellow fever prevailed there, and was dismissed from the service.] Mr. Lyman moved to strike out the enacting clause. Lost. The bill was then laid aside with a favorable consideration, and when the committee rose, the bill passed. The next bill was considered in Committee of the Whole. [It provides that that part of the naval act of 1882, which limits the number of graduates of the Naval Academy to be retained in the service each year, shall not apply to those classes which had completed a four years' course at the academy prior to the passage of the act, and those members of the class of 1881 who had been honorably discharged may return to the service and take their places on the Naval Register in the same manner as if that part of the act had not been passed.] After debate, and without action, the committee rose and the House adjourned.

The Bureau of Labor.

WASHINGTON, May 23.—The Senate to-day, by 55 to 2, the nays being Colquitt and Salisbury, passed Aldrick's substitute for the bill creating a Bureau of Labor, as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., that there shall be established in the Department of the Interior a Bureau of Labor, which shall be under the charge of a Commissioner of Labor, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Commissioner of Labor shall hold his office for four years, and until his successor shall be appointed and qualified, unless sooner removed, and shall receive a salary of $3,000 a year. The Commissioner shall collect information upon the subject of labor, its relation to capital, hours of labor, the earnings of laboring men and women and the means of promoting their material, social, intellectual and moral prosperity. The Secretary of the Interior shall appoint a Chief Clerk, who shall receive a salary of $2,000 per annum, and such other employes as may be necessary for said bureau. Provided, the total expenses shall not exceed $25,000 per annum. During the necessary absence of the Commissioner, or when the office shall become vacant, the Chief Clerk shall perform the duties of Commissioner. The Commissioner shall annually make report to the Secretary of the Interior of the information collected and collated by him, and containing such recommendations as he may deem calculated to promote the efficiency of the bureau."

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The market has been somewhat variable in its action, responding about the middle of the week to the apprehensive and depressed feelings in general commerce which proceeded from the crisis on Wall street. This feeling had practical reference here to apprehensions of a close money market; but this has subsided, and no impression therefrom is now perceptible in the market. There was a slight dip during the course of the week in both Burley and dark and heavy styles, but before the close the difference was fully retrieved, and prices at the finish were as high as a week ago, or slightly higher. Lugs and common leaf have been especially firm latterly. The planting is considered encouraging in the highest degree. A small beginning in setting out plants is reported in several districts. We quote full weight packages of new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 30 @ 6 50	$6 50 @ 7 50
Common lugs	6 75 @ 7 15	7 00 @ 8 00
Medium lugs	7 35 @ 7 65	8 00 @ 9 00
Good lugs	8 00 @ 8 25	10 00 @12 00
Common leaf	7 50 @ 8 50	10 00 @13 00
Medium leaf	8 75 @ 9 50	14 00 @17 00
Good leaf	10 00 @11 00	18 00 @21 00

OTIS S. GAGE & CO., of Louisville, well known dealers in agricultural implements, have assigned. Liabilities not known, but thought to be covered by the assets. The assignment was forced by a suit for $3,060.

A VERY interesting case was tried before 'Squire Ewan, of Covington, the other day, in which the right of a husband over the personalty of his wife was the principal question. A clever and able bricklaying contractor, who makes plenty of money, but will "take his tea" occasionally, went home one night tolerably "full" from frequent potations. His wife, seeing his condition, and knowing the "subsequences," went through his pockets and took his money—no inconsiderable amount—therefrom, depositing it in bank in her own name. When he discovered what had been done, he went to the bank and demanded the funds, but was refused. Then he notified the bank not to pay the money to the wife, and sued for it. The point made by his attorney was that, under the laws of Kentucky, the personal property of the wife is the personal property of the husband, and hence he had a right to the deposit, even if the money had been earned by the wife, who is not a femme sole. The question is one of some interest, and the circumstances novel.

S. L. NASH, agent of the Masonic Mutual Benefit Society of Indianapolis was arrested at Frankfort a few days ago, for violating the Insurance Law, which requires a license for all co-operative companies organized outside the State. This is the first arrest under the new law.

A HORRIBLE case of wholesale poisoning by hemlock took place near Harrodsburg a few days ago. Eighteen boys, after playing a game of base ball, started in search of wild parsnips, but got hold of the deadly hemlock instead. The boys ate freely, and all were taken violently ill. Two died almost immediately, five are in a critical condition, and not expected to live, and the others are suffering more or less.

IMMEDIATELY after the adjournment of the Court of Appeals at Frankfort on the 22d, the members of the bar of the State present met in the court-room to take action upon the death of Judge Richard Reid, of the Superior Court. On motion of Judge Alvin Duvall, of Frankfort, ex-Governor Thos. P. Porter, of Versailles, was called to the chair, and Mr. Russell Helm, of Louisville, was appointed Secretary. On motion, the Chair appointed Judge W. S. Pryor, Judge W. M. Beckner, Judge Alvin Duvall, Judge A. E. Richards, Judge H. W. Bruce, Hon. J. L. Ward and Hon. Thos. N. Allen as a Committee on Resolutions. Brief addresses, highly eulogistic of the life and character of the lamented Judge Reid were delivered by Chief Justice Hargis, Colonel W. C. P. Breckinridge, Hon. J. Q. Ward, Judge Alvin Duvall, General John Rodman, Judge W. M. Beckner and Hon. Thos. N. Allen.

ED. W. CREEKMORE arrived at Richmond, a few days ago, having in charge one W. B. Kidwell, a horse-thief, whom he had arrested at Lake City, Ill., on a requisition from the Governor of this State. Kidwell is charged with stealing a horse from Captain W. C. Campbell, and a mule from John F. White, in Madison County, several weeks ago.

THE jury in the case of the Commonwealth against Hobson Chambers at Louisville, charged with the murder of Talbott J. Milligan, returned a verdict on the 20th, of guilty, and fixed the punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for life. The verdict was a surprise to everybody.

THE reunion of the Nineteenth Ohio Veterans took place at Louisville, a few days since. It was largely attended by veteran soldiers from Kentucky, Indiana and Ohio. Fourteen cars of veterans were met at the depot by resident veterans and the Fourth Kentucky regiment, and escorted to Phoenix Hill, where Mayor Jacob extended them a Kentucky welcome. Addresses were made by Colonel R. M. Kelly, of the Fourth Kentucky; Colonel M. D. Mason, of the Tenth Indiana, and Major Stein, of the Fourth Kentucky.

CARRIE BEST, charged with poisoning her husband, Stewart Best, went into Court at Nicholasville, a few days since, and gave herself up. The prisoner was placed in the custody of the Sheriff in lieu of going to jail.

A. C. SNOW, thirty years old, commited suicide at Stanford, on the 23d, by taking morphine. He made an unsuccessful attempt at suicide four years ago. He left several sealed letters to relatives and friends, among them one to a young lady there, with whom he was in love. Her refusal to marry him is said to be the cause of the act.

THE DAIRY.

—Ventilation in the dairy should be done at night or early in the morning, when the air is the coolest.

—A Vermont dairyman says a young calf should be fed three times a day. Over feeding at long intervals, and especially with cold feed, kills a good many valuable calves.

—In turning cows to pasture early in the spring they are very sure to eat too much of the young grass and bring on the scours. This can be guarded against by putting the cows up at night and letting them stand to hay.

—While milk is standing for cream to rise, the purity of the cream, and consequently the fine flavor and keeping of the butter, will be injured if the surface of the cream is exposed freely to air much warmer than the cream.

—Unless you are able and willing to personally superintend the scalding of your milk pans, it would be better to use earthenware. Nothing but boiling water and plenty of it will remove the germs of disease that lurk in the half-washed tin vessels.

—In answer to a question as to what is the best grain food for milch cows, Professor Arnold recommends four parts of bran, two parts of corn-meal and one part of linseed oil meal as having given him the best results in proportion to cost of any dry food that he has ever used.

—Mr. Victor M. Drake tells how he represses devotion to perpetual motion on the part of self-sucking cows: "Tie short, and apply aloes to the teats immediately after milking. The pungent bitter taste of the drug, after one or two applications will general effect a cure. Keep up the treatment for several days, for fear the appetite for milk will return."

—It seems to be pretty well accepted as true, the statement made at the meeting of the Northwestern Dairymen's Association, that one-third of the cows now in use in the dairies of the country are unprofitable, one-third just pay for their board and bed, while the other third must make up the losses on the first third and make something over to keep the dairymen out of the poor house.

—A suggestion worth its weight in gold (taking ten pounds as a standard) is this: If you can command a strong stream of water through a hose when the butter comes in granules, draw off the buttermilk and turn this stream on the butter. It must make the buttermilk fly, and wash the butter much better than it could be done by turning the churn or working a dasher in it.—American Dairyman.

—There is hardly any point in the management of dairy cows of more importance than that of having them regularly fed. If there is one thing on earth that a cow remembers better than another it is the hour that her feed is due. If she has a good normal appetite she will grow restless and anxious as the hour approaches, and this state of mind is said to be very injurious upon the quality of the milk. If they are loose, under such circumstances, they are certain to begin hooking one another. It is a very bad habit for hands to get into, and keeping regular hours should be impressed upon them. When one man gets behind it is certain to delay every other man on the place where there is customary system in vogue; if the feeding is delayed the milking must be also, and that sets back the hour for setting away the milk and washing the utensils, and so the first delay works mischief all round.—American Dairyman.

—Major Alvord is doing some giant labor in trying to induce the dairymen of his country to raise instead of buying their cows. The main point of his argument is the great danger of importing into their neighborhood the diseases of other States by this buying system. He says while all may not believe in the stories about cows that average their weight in milk every month, or butter in a year; but by halving this yield, we come within the limits of what can be economically attained. Then he well says, as a rule where ten cows are now kept, the same food and care, or less, given to seven better animals would give better results. Generally the seven can be selected from the ten or their offspring, but no such improvement is possible under the trade system. This is a little doubtful; "the only safe method of steady, sure, profitable improvement is to form a permanent herd, and maintain and enlarge it by its own increase judiciously handled.—Exchange.

The Milking Time.

So strangely impressed upon the cow is the time at which she is milked that she becomes anxious for the operation before the period of milking arrives. The udder, which was emptied in the morning, gradually becomes distended and painful as evening advances, and as the pressure at a certain time becomes habitual, the animal will regularly, if allowed, be prompt at an exact time to be milked. But this is only the case with cows that are milked at regular hours, not fifteen minutes too soon, or half an hour later, but at the correct moment. The consequence is that there will be fewer cows that may engage in the vice of "holding up the milk," as the force of regularity will overcome many of the inducements that prompt them to depart from proper habits, and during the night, as she chews her cud and the milk accumulates, she will quickly become habituated to look forward to the hour, so regular, when she will be milked and relieved of her incumbrance. When the udder is allowed to distend unusually the pain is sometimes very severe, and the disposition of the cow injured thereby, to say nothing of the nervous irritability to which she will be subjected, and in the course of a short time the quantity of milk becomes less and the cow ruined in temper. If, on the contrary, she be milked before the regular hour, the period between that milking and the succeeding one is lengthened exactly in proportion as the first method shortens it; the cow, in the meantime, being deprived of regularity, loses much of the training taught her, by beginning to overcome the habit of expectation of the regular period, and the consequence will be less regularity in feeding as well.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

SINCE the establishment of the system, more than twenty years ago, only ninety National banks have failed, and the loss to creditors has not exceeded $9,000,000, the average loss being about seventy per cent. in each case. VANDERBILT says that the cause of the financial trouble is that Americans want to make money too fast. This causes the Washington Star to remark: "It is, indeed, a pity that the rest of us can't be satisfied to plod along on an assured income of a million or two a month, like Vanderbilt, and leave speculation alone, except in particular railway specialties where one can manipulate the market at convenience."

ASSUMING that the financial failures are over for the time, it now remains to be seen whether they are to be supplemented by failures of justice. The villainy has been exposed, and the crimes have done their worst upon society. And now, are the thieves and perjurers in high places to be made to suffer from the penalties attached by law to their disclosed and confessed misdeeds?

CHICAGO has just had a new experience in the work of securing qualified jurors to try one of the many murderers who cumber its jails. The old-time idea of ruling men off juries because they had read accounts of the murder in newspapers appears to be carried to its extreme limit. For this reason, a panel of one hundred and sixty-nine was exhausted recently without securing even a respectable foundation for a jury.

We are authorized to announce

of Harrison county, as a candidate for Judge of the Superior Court, from the 3rd Superior Court district, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Reid. Subject to the action of the Democratic party.

UNDER the new school law a county superintendent of schools will have to be elected at the August election.

THE State can well afford to have such petty politicians as Judge Hargis retire from high official position.

JUDGE HOLMAN had a walk-over in the nominating convention last week. The Judge will succeed himself in Congress, as he is a very acceptable candidate to both parties in his district.

THE State board will meet in Frankfort, June 10th, for the purpose of equalizing the assessments for State taxes. The County Clerk has been instructed by the Auditor to withhold the Sheriff's tax book, until he receives notice as to whether the valuation of Boone county property has been increased or diminished by the board.

Judge James O'Hara.

The above named gentleman has an unanimous call by the bars of Boone, Campbell and Kenton counties, regardless of parties, to become a candidate for the office of Judge of the Superior Court from this district, which office was rendered vacant by the death of Judge Reid. Judge O'Hara is well and favorably known by the people of Boone county, and there is no question as to his ability to make a splendid officer of that high tribunal. Judge O'Hara is an able jurist; has had a long experience in his profession, and is possessed of a will and physical ability which places him at the head of his profession when long, hard study is required to divest a legal proposition of its perplexities. Judge O'Hara would be an honor to the bench if elected.

Hon. J. Q. Ward for Superior Judge.

At a meeting of the members of Harrison county bar and officers of the Harrison Chancery Court, held at the Court-house in Cynthiana, Ky., on Monday, May 19, 1884, Hon. L. M. Martin was called to the chair, and W. W. Longmoor, Esq., was chosen as Secretary of said meeting.

The Chairman stated the object of the meeting, and on motion the chair appointed T. T. Forman, C. W. West and L. Desha, jr., a committee to draft resolutions expressing the sense of the meeting in relation to the object of the same.

Said committee reported as follows:

Whereas, By reason of the death of Hon. Richard Reid, which we deeply deplore, there is a vacancy in the office of the Judge of the Superior Court of Kentucky from the District of which this county is a part; and whereas for nearly twenty-five years the Hon. J. Q. Ward has been a member of this bar, with an active and varied practice not only in this county, but called repeatedly to other counties and other States than this in which to practice his profession; a man of ripe scholarship, spotless integrity, and great legal ability, and possessed of all qualifications to fill worthily the high office of Judge of said Court;

Resolved, That we do heartily recommend to the Democracy of this Superior Court District the said Hon. J. Q. Ward for nomination and election to fill the unexpired term of the said Hon. Richard Reid; and

Resolved, That the press of this district be requested to publish the proceedings of this meeting.

On motion said resolutions were unanimously adopted and then the meeting adjourned.

L. M. MARTIN, Chairman.
W. W. LONGMOOR, Secretary.

Next year when property is being assessed it will be the duty of the Assessor to assess it at its cash value as of January 10th. To hold the Assessor to the tract, an iron-clad oath is prepared for him, a copy of which he has to sign and send to the Auditor. The new law controling the assessment of property in the future is a strong effort to provide against the false valuations so much complained of by the Auditor.

The Standard Bred Trotting Stallion

MAMBRINO

ABDALLAH,

Will make the coming season at Hogan Grove Farm, 3 miles north of Williamstown, Grant county, Ky., near the Dry Ridge Depot, C. S. R. R.

At $20 to Insure.

DESCRIPTION AND PEDIGREE.

Mambrino Abdallah is a bay stallion 15½ hands, foaled 1873. Bred by L. Herr, proprietor Forrest Park Breeding Farm, Lexington, Ky., by Mambrino Patchen.

First dam, Lady Ayers, by Redmon's Abdallah Patchen. Second dam Lady Abdallah (dam of Granville, 2:26) by Alexander's Abdallah.

Mambrino Patchen (full brother to Lady Thorn, 2:18¼), by Mambrino Chief; dam by Gano, son of American Eclipse; second dam by son of Sir William, by Sir Archy.

Redmon's Abdallah Patchen, got by Alexander's Abdallah (sire of Goldsmith Maid 2:14), son of Rysdyk's Hambletonian; dam Lady Valentine, by Redmond's Valentine son of Imp. Valentine; 2d dam by Shakspeare; 3d dam by Potomac; 4th dam by Blackburn's Whip, son of Imp. Whip.

Alexander's Abdallah (sire of Goldsmith Maid, 2:14) got by Rysdyk's Hambletonian; dam Katie Darling by Bay Roman.

Mambrino Patchen, sire of Mambrino Abdallah leads all other living horses in number of grandchildren that have beaten 2:30, and the average speed is faster. Mambrino Patchen leads in number and speed having 8 sons and 7 daughters that have produced 16 trotters in 2:30 and under Wilkes Boy 2 years old, record 2:30½, is also out of a Mambrino Patchen mare, and the Marvel record 2:30¼, is by a son of Mambrino Patchen.

Mambrino Abdallah's colts are nearly all bay. He is good in all points, great substance and stamina, and was the fastest natural trotter at even 12 months old I ever saw, and I priced him then at $5,000, and not a cent less would have bought him at that time. He is a sure and first-class breeder. I have sold a number of his colts at yearlings for $500 each. I sold a filly at 18 months old for $1,000, and a colt coming 3 years old for $1,200, and a four-year-old for $1,500. He is kindly disposed in or out of harness, and one of the most popular horses in the country to-day.

Lady Ayers (the dam of Mambrino Abdallah) is the dam of Tillie Thorn, who can trot better than 2:30. She is also the dam of Thorn Boy, a colt I sold a few days since at the age of of 18 months for $1,200. Every colt Lady Ayers has ever produced I have sold for $500, and upwards.

Mambrino Abdallah breeds as fine colts as any horse living, and his colts show extra action, extra size, and always command good prices. Yours Truly, L. HERR.

The undersigned state that we know the horse Mambrino Abdallah, now in control of O. P. Hogan, jun., have examined his colts, and cheerfully recommend this horse to breeders as one of the best in Kentucky W. W. Adams, Mammoth sale stable, Lexington; J. T. None But Henly.

SANDFORD, FLA., May 20, 1884.

Messrs. Editors.

Dear Sirs:—

I see an item in last week's RECORDER: "Dr. Smith's family are suffering with flux in Florida." Would say the family are all doing well and enjoying the best of health, and find the summer weather delightful. Henly was the only one that had flux. The worst trouble they have is the rush for the RECORDER, about once a week.

Yours, A. W. SMITH.

The Masonic burial ceremony will be performed at the grave of Dr. James T. Grubbs in the cemetery at this place at 3 p. m., [illegible] Sunday in next month. The members of the order will meet in the Masonic Hall, in Burlington, from which place they will proceed to the grave. A large attendance of the fraternity is desired to honor the memory of, probably, the oldest mason in the United States, he having been a member of the order for 67 years. All the sister lodges in the county are invited to take part in the ceremony.

On Friday night next, May 30th, a Strawberry Festival will be given by the Misses Hughes at their elegant home near Beaver. The proceeds of the festival to be devoted to Wesley-chapel. A cordial welcome is extended to every one, and judging from the success of these noble young women in their former festivals, a most enjoyable time will be had by all who attend. At former ones, and at this, Walton, Burlington and Covington have been and, we dare say, will be well represented, and we bespeak for an enterprise so worthy, a flattering success.

There is a rupture in the colored society of the town, and from some of the remarks made by them last week, a report gained circulation that the colored people were organizing for the purpose of an insurrection. Some of the citizens were considerably alarmed for a day or two, and one night they stood guard, but no insurrectionists appeared to disturb the repose of the town. Some thought that an itinerant negro preacher who came to town a few days before was the disturbing element, and he received a letter in which were inclosed a twine string and a piece of walnut limb, and giving him a certain time in which to leave the burg. He was soon on his way out of the town, and has not been seen since. The trouble is confined to the negro population, and if the agitation is continued it may yet culminate in an internecine war among them. The trouble originated about the records of the defunct Kemper Council, and each faction is lead by a colored minister.

Died.

HOWARD—On the 27th inst., Mrs. Frances Howard, wife of Elijah Howard, of Bullittsville.

The funeral was preached at Bullittsburg church Tuesday at 3 p. m. The husband has a large circle of friends who sympathize with him in his bereavement.

GRUBBS—On the 21st inst., at his residence in Taylorport, Dr. James T. Grubbs, in the 88th year of his age.

Dr. Grubbs was a native of Virginia. He came to Burlington in 1821, and began the practice of medicine, having attended a course of medical lectures at Philadelphia, from which place he went to Cincinnati and graduated in the Ohio Medical College, being the first graduate of that institution. After his location in Burlington Dr. Grubbs was soon considered at the head of the medical profession of Boone county, and by his strict economy and judicious investment of the proceeds of his practice, he accumulated quite a nice fortune. At the time of his death he was probably the oldest mason in the United States, having been an active member of that fraternity for over sixty-seven years. Many years ago he joined the Methodist church at this place, and had not moved his membership when that church organization ceased to exist in Burlington.

No funeral services were performed, the remains being quietly placed beside those of his wife, in the Burlington cemetery, last Friday at 1 p. m.; but next Sunday at 3 p. m., the Masonic fraternity will honor the memory of their deceased veteran brother, by performing their burial ceremony at his grave.

The deceased leaves two sons and several grand-children, who have the sympathy of the entire community in their affliction.

From Florence to Walton the farmers are not done planting corn.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Florence.

"But thou has kept the good wine until now." By this introduction we do not propose to write up the marriage feast in Cana, of Galilee, that was honored by the presence of the blessed Master and his mother, and is remarkable for being the place of the first miracle performed by the Saviour, that of turning water into wine; but it seems eminently fitting, at this time, as we have just passed through a series of weddings, the last of which was consumated on Wednesday, 21st, at the Catholic church, to give a recital of the events of the latter, which, to us, seems the most brilliant affair of the season, and we dare say was only excelled in point of interest at the notable feast we have mentioned, by the personal presence of Jesus and his deciples. This suggested to my mind that the best of the wine had been reserved for the last of the feast.

As had been previously announced, the wedding nuptials of Miss Emma Rich, of Florence, and Mr. Frederick Droege, of Toledo, O., was fixed for the 21st inst., at 9 o'clock a. m., but the publicity of the affair brought together such an immense crowd, that to make every one comfortable as possible, it was necessary to postpone the ceremonies until near 10 o'clock. Judging from the great collection of persons and the different style of costumes, one would suppose that every nationality of the globe was here represented. From the little prattler on its mother's knee, to the grand-mammy with cap and kerchief; from the fuzzy youth of 16 to the crusty old bachelor; there was miss and misses there, and all the shy widows, too, with bows and ribbons and basques and mother-hubbards and frills and flounces and bangs and frizzes and 100 pounds of bloom of youth and swansdown, more or less, &c.

All these anxious sightseers, save those who couldn't get in, were comfortably arranged by the untiring efforts of the gentlemanly ushers, John Oelsner and Michael Dennaly, to whom your correspondent is indebted for special favors. Every pew in the capacious house was taxed to its utmost capacity. The church was tastefully decorated in garlands of evergreens and floral offerings, and the faithful ministration of Father Burke, all the surroundings had the air of perfect harmony. The bride, who is the only daughter of Mr. Fred Rich, of Florence, is a beautiful brunette of 18 years, and a most estimable and highly accomplished lady. Her good qualities had won for her the affections of the town, which turned out enmasse to witness the festivities. Mr. Droege, the groom, is comparatively a stranger here, but has the reputation and demeanor of a perfect gentleman.

As the hour neared, all eyes were eager to catch a glimpse of the center of attraction, and every rustle at the door drew the attention of the crowd. The rumbling of hacks at the front, apprised us that the time had come, and amid a breathless silence, the party soon formed in the aisle at the door in the following order: First the ushers, then the attendants, Mr. John Reich, Miss Kate Droege; Mr. Chas. Oelsner, Miss Fannie Droege; Mr. John Droege, Miss Hannah Oelsner; Mr. Barney Tabling, Miss Lena Droege; the bride and groom. The organist now struck up the wedding march and the party moved down the aisle, when nearing the altar, the attendants filed to the sides facing each other, and the bride and groom passed through, immediately followed by the waiters in reversed order. The reserved pews on either side, five in number, were occupied by the attendants and near relatives of the family. To one who has not made it a study, description of dress is a hard task; we will, however, endeavor to give a faint conception at least. The bride was richly attired in brocaded satin, cream color, with long train, a bridal veil that reached the floor. The hair, which is of lustrious black, fell in a profusion of natural curls, and was caught at the back with a loop of silver ribbon and orange buds. The ornaments were diamonds. The groom was dressed in neat plain black of unostentatious style, the token of a well bred gentleman. The bridesmaids all wore costumes of musvelling in same style of bride, with long train and color to match—flower ornaments. The groomsmen were faultlessly clad in the prevailing fashion. To particularize as to how each one looked, would take too much space, suffice it to say that he or she that could find fault is hard to please.

We cannot pass, however, without noting the compliments that were passed upon Miss Hannah Oelsner, a pretty brunette and belle of our town, for the arrangement of her toilet.

But, to the marriage rites. Father Burke read from the Catholic Ritural, the ceremony, and the happy pair were made man and wife. Their vows were sealed with the ring, and the whole service was celebrated by the communion of High Mass, which occupied about one hour and a half. Father Burke gave a public congratulation to the couple, and some well timed advice founded upon Paul's writings, Col. 3—18—19.

The closing scene, and most interesting of all, was the marching down the aisle by the little brother and sister of the groom, and the presentation by them to the bride, of a floral boat.

The audience now dispersed, and the marriage party and invited guests repaired to Mr. Geo. Lubbe's on the Covington and Lexington pike, where a sumptuous feast was prepared at Mr. Rich's expense, he not having sufficient room at his home in Florence.

The bride and groom were the recipients of many valuable and useful presents, a list of which was furnished us by the politeness of Mr. Geo. G. Hoover, as follows:

Set of diamonds by groom; parlor set, parents of groom; bedroom set, father of bride; silver cake-basket and soup terreen, Mr. and Mrs. I Droege, jr.; silver water pitcher, John C. Droege; gilt clock, Miss Mary Droege; silver toilet set, Fannie Droege; silver card receiver and bouquet holder, Miss Kate Droege; prayer book, Frank Droege; crucifix, Willie Droege; coffee urn, John Oelsner; berry stand, Chas. Oelsner; fancy lamp, Eliza Oelsner; silver castor, Henry Oelsner; set of silver knives and forks, Mr. and Mrs. F. Schmidt; pair of vases, Mr. and Mrs. Jo. Hermes; pair of vases, Mrs. Spiegle; decorated fruit dishes, Mrs. Josie Allie; fancy toilet set, Mr. and Mrs. Louisa Braker; silver pickle castor, Mrs. S. Menzer; silver baking dish, Mr. and Mrs. H. Terlau; silver butter dish, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Krau; Holy Water font, Mrs. Harvey Metzker; silver jelly stand, Robert D. Buttle; pepper and salt bottle with tray, Miss Melissa Aydelotte; toilet table, Miss Lena Droege; scrap pickle cross, Miss Kuhl; silver cake basket, Mr. and Mrs. L. Droege; floral boat, Charles, Emma, Julia, Theresa and Titus Droege; $50 in gold, John Reich; phaeton buggy, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Lubbe; plush album, Hannah Oelsner.

My wife advises me if I have occasion to marry again, to try and get in the above family.

AT THE OLD PLACE.

I visited the old place, Cal,
Where you and I were raised;
Ah, what a lengthened interval
Had passed since last I gazed
Upon those well remembered scenes,
'Tis fifteen years or more;
We neither then had reached our 'teens
And still short jackets wore.

Those roundabouts, you recollect,
That looked so nicely then,
For we, as boys, did not affect
The ways of older men;
We wore them at the school each day,
On Sunday at the church.
They had no long tails in the way
When father swung the birch.

The old farm-house has altered much;
It used to look quit grand,
But now it shows the blighting touch
Of time on every hand.
You know a mortgage on it sat
When father sold to Jones—
It's got one now so heavy that
The old foundation groans.

I visited the little brook
Where through vacation terms,
We'd sit within some shaded nook
And torture angle worms.
If e'er a foolish minnow bit
At our enticing bait,
He must have been advised to quit
By some maturer mate.

Young Towser, who refused to come
When we sojourned east,
Is still here, blind, and deaf, and "mum,"
On most of themes, at least.
His feelings, whether joy or grief,
For the most part find their vent
Through his tail, which, on the theme of beef,
Is truly eloquent.

The forest where the grapevine grew,
On which we used to swing,
Has wholly disappeared from view,
And now, when comes the spring,
Instead of violets and moss
And the toothsome wintergreen,
A lean hired man with a spavined "hoss"
And a worn-out plow is seen.

The school where you and I grew wise
Looks just about the same,
Except that it seems less in size—
Old Bobbins says the frame
Was green when new and that the school,
When seasoned, "sorter shrunk."
He thought, perhaps, I was a fool,
I know that he was drunk.

However, Bobbins' funny view
A gentle hint doth hold
Of why the school seemed larger now
Than now when it is old.
'Twas not green timbers, but green years,
The school, in days more wise,
In true proportions now appears
To our well-seasoned eyes.

ANOTHER CASE OF THE "WRONG SUNDAY."

Do people, as they read, ever stop to think how often in books the plot, or main idea, is the same? A situation is repeated, only with different actors and different stage appurtenances, year in and year out, from the first recorded history to the present day. It is not Shakespeare only who pleased his peevish fancy with a "Comedy of Errors." He had many a prototype, and has had a many repetition since that day. To err is human; we like to err; and when unable to mistake each other are ready to mistake things. Readers of Jules Verne will remember how the impenetrable Englishman, Phileas Fogg, went around the world in even less than eighty days, but did not keep the right account, and by the mistake of a day very nearly lost his wager. In somewhat the same way Deacon Weaver lost sight of the day of the week, and in this case lost the wager, too. He might not have called it a wager, being opposed on principle to any such arbitration of chance, still it was one, and as such he lost it. To begin at the beginning, however.

Deacon Weaver's old red farm house lay at the foot of a hill sunnily fronting the south, and, secure in this sheltered nook, put to defiance the keen winds. At its left was the orchard; in front a road that led to the village a mile away, where the white church steeple rose like a beacon; and across the road, just opposite the house, was a large, commodious barn. The late Eastern Spring had put out a few buds by way of experiment, and, although snow yet clung to the hillsides, the fields were bare and brown.

On the day when this story opens the air was deliciously mild, and the Deacon's three sons were seated on the barn steps enjoying it. They had finished dinner and were waiting for their father to go with them to the field. Meanwhile they were grumbling.

Grumbling must be one of those imitative words which philologists tell us, were the first approach to language—a rumbling, muttering monotone of discontent, hardly ever rising into the decisive accents of wrath; just an obstinately kept up accompaniment to the every-day events of life. Everybody knows that an habitual grumbler is a very unpleasant person to live with; and, had the Weaver boys been of this class, their story, quite likely, would not have been told. But their grumbling was only semi-occasional, and circumstances went far to excuse it. They were always in a state of repression; no allowance was made for their youth, for boyish fun or boyish wishes. Their father prided himself on being strictly just; but this must have been a mistake on his part; strict justice does not go with such utter hardness; and the Deacon was so inflexible that he would much sooner break than bend. No half-way measures for him. "When I say a thing, I mean it," was his favorite expression. Where the children were concerned, it was always. Do this!—do that! and if instant obedience was not given, the whip fell. "Not a word!" he would say. "Do as I tell you—that's all I want."

Mrs. Weaver was, herself, of a comfortable, kindly temperament, but could do little toward softening her husband's harshness. She, too, lived in fear of it, and obeyed with anxious promptitude. Still, in one way or another, she contrived to make life tolerable to the children. She it was who noted the paternal weather-signs, and gave the youngsters warning; who baked cakes for them surreptitiously, and in many an unnoticed way put into their young lives some of that interest and variety their father would have crushed.

So time passed on until the boys were thirteen, fifteen and seventeen years of age, respectively; strong, active fellows, able to do a good day's work, and required to do it, except in the winter months, when they went to district school. But amusements they had none. They never went nutting like other boys; they never visited. When they went to the village it was always on an errand, the length of their absence fixed, and woe betide them if they exceeded it. And just now, seated on the barn steps, they were discussing their latest grievance. The night before there had been a lecture in the village—an account of travel in the Holy Land, illustrated by panoramic views. This was an entertainment so innocent and praiseworthy, so cheap, too—only ten cents admission—that they really hoped, for once, they might be allowed to go. They had asked permission and been refused: their mother had pleaded their cause—in vain!

"No, no," said the Deacon, "you needn't say any more. My mind's made up. I won't have any skylarking on my premises. The Bible tells us as much about Jerusalem as decent people need to know. Get Jerusalem in your hearts and there'll be enough of it in your heads. You needn't talk; you can't go!"

"That's the way it always is," growled Bill, the youngest, as they talked the matter over.

"Yes," said Charley, "I never was anywhere in my life, except at the stores or the meeting-house. I don't mind so much about the circus, for, of course, father's a deacon, and he wouldn't think that was respectable. But a lecture! it's too bad."

"And," added Isaac, "it isn't as if we were like some boys in the neighborhood, who are always loafing around and spinning street-yarn. We are not running off, and out nights, and letting the work go."

Charley, the oldest, gave a little kick to the step by way of emphasis to his feelings. "I'm seventeen, and just aching for a chance at a little more schooling. But father'll never hear of it. 'Can you spell through the spellin'-book?' he asked the other night; and when I said yes, I could, 'Well, then,' says he, 'go over it agen. When I was a boy, I spelled through it forty-four times.' As if a fellow ought to waste his brains in doing forty-four times what eleven times would more than make him more than perfect in! It's my belief he never was a boy."

"Now, young man," said a dry voice behind him, "if you've freed your mind, we'll go to work."

The boys, all three of them, jumped as though suddenly galvanized. The Deacon, in fact, had stolen a march on them; he had gone through the orchard, and, crossing the road lower down, entered the barn from the rear. He now stood in the doorway, grimly surveying the three malcontents. "Want more schoolin', do you?" said he. "Now, don't let me hear any more of that nonsense. I'm older'n you, and know best what's good for you."

"Oh, father! are you sure you do?" cried Charley, impulsively; for if this winged moment held a single chance for him he could not bear to let it slip. "Are you sure you do?" he said. "Haven't I worked steady, and been faithful? I haven't complained, either, though sometimes I felt hard. Father, put yourself in my place a minute. You have means, and I would be saving as possible. Let me have a year in the High School, and there's nothing I'll not do for you."

The Deacon surveyed the petitioner with his habitual scowl, and did not immediately answer. Perhaps, if the truth were known, he was a little touched by the eager pleading and honest, boyish face of his first-born. But if there was any indecision it was brief. When he spoke his voice had the old, hard ring, and Charley's hopes fell even before the words were uttered.

"See here, Charles," he said, "I'm not going to have any more words over this matter, so we'll settle it once for all. You seem to think I don't know what's best for you. May'be I don't; but who are you to judge? I don't remember being wrong when once I made up my mind. I have my reasons, and I act on them. Now, I say, you'll get no schooling from me, outside the district; unless, indeed"—he paused, watching the expectant look that began to dawn on the lads' faces at such an unlooked-for loophole as a proviso—"unless, indeed, you can prove that you know more than I do when I've given you your orders."

At this characteristic ending expectancy died again: how is the mouse, safe lodged in pussy's claws, to prove to her she ought to let him go? "Might 'a' known you was foolin'," muttered Bill, who, although the youngest—or perhaps because he was the youngest, and of a waggish turn of mind—had less fear of his father than the rest.

"Very well, sir," said Charles, resignedly. The party went about their work; the younger boys talked together, but he was silent, and a pitiable expression of hopelessness shadowed his face. His father may have felt that he had been too harsh, for frequently he glanced around at him, and during the rest of the afternoon was as nearly pleasant as his nature permitted. But the subject was not renewed, and a week or more passed by. Charley was not the same lad, however; he did not eat much, he moped. The truth was, he felt for the first time that the key was turned in the lock, and that he himself was a prisoner. Hope had visited him before; now she was shut out. A little village, no chance of earning money, under age, ignorant except in farm work and a little miscellaneous reading—he was indeed hemmed in. To many, in a situation like this, comes the idea of escape, no matter what means are used to effect it. It was characteristic of the steady, clear-headed Charles that in the crash of his hopes he planned neither revenge nor flight. Of the first he was incapable; for the last he was not fitted; so, though downhearted, he did not neglect his work, and toiled on faithfully.

He could have taken no better course, had he tried, to work on his father's sympathy. Tears, pettishness—these always roused the iron old man to resistance or punishment. In the present case I almost think he would have welcomed an excuse sufficient to release him from his word, so much did he respect the manly demeanor of his son.

To this end, indeed, events were already paving the way. The Deacon had made up his mind that it was going to be a good corn year, and was anxious to plant a good deal. As this entailed extra work, the family was kept busy enough. At last there remained only a three-acre field, and the Deacon had resolved to himself that this should be plowed on Saturday.

All the week the boys had been hard at work, and when Saturday night came they were not sorry. Sunday morning dawned, serene and clear, not a breath of wind stirring, and the warmth of the sun drawing a spicy fragrance from the earth. Chores were done as usual, breakfast—never a sociable meal—was disposed of, Mrs. Weaver went into the kitchen to make arrangements for dinner and the Deacon himself, drawing his own chair back from the table, looked with mingled disgust and anger at his sons. They were sitting lazily around, enjoying the sense of leisure, the freedom from work, which Sunday morning always brought.

"Dawdle, dawdle!" said the Deacon, sharply. "Where'd I be, if I dawdled like you when I's a boy? Where'd you be, I'd like to know? Come, get up; stir yourselves, or you won't get anything done to-day. Charles, you take the roan, and go to plowing the three-acre. That field's tolable rough; I reckon Bill had better sit on the horse. Isaac, you take some shavings and matches, and fire the old stump at the far end of the lot. Quick, now, an' make up for lost time. I'll jine ye before long."

The boys had been staring at their father in open-mouthed consternation; but this exordium so roused Bill's sense of the ludicrous that involuntarily he snickered.

"You, sir!"—the Deacon turned sharp upon him—"what's that for? I'll teach you to laugh!" and a vigorous slap certainly did alter the expression on Bill's countenance. "Well"—turning to Charles—"why don't you start?"

Charles was still staring at him in bewilderment. "But father," he began.

"But me no buts," said his father; "not another word; but do as I bid you."

"Yes, sir," began Charles once more, "but—" The Deacon lost patience. "Go to—thunder!" he shouted. (Well for him he was a deacon, else might the expletive be worse.) "Do you mean to stand here and jaw me all day? Not another word, but do you go and do as I tell you."

By one common impulse the three boys turned, disappeared through the door, hastily crossed the road, and when fairly inside of the barn, stopped, and looked at each other. "Jewhilikercricket's!" gasped Bill at last, and lay down on the dusty floor in a convulsion of merriment, in which, though less audibly, the others joined. At length said Charles: "This won't do. He told us not to say a word, and we won't. Hurry up, boys! let's get to the field before he finds out;" for already it had dawned upon him that if his father was the man of his word he took him to be, here was his chance for that year's schooling. And, as it happened, everything was in his favor and against the Deacon.

Shortly after breakfast, Mrs. Weaver was confronted with an accident. Their own minister was ill, and his place that day was to be supplied by a brother minister from a town ten miles away. He drove over with his wife, and they were to take dinner at Deacon Weaver's. Pies, cake, and biscuit had been baked on Saturday, and placed on the hanging-shelf in the cellar. This morning, whether as a prologue to the omen coming on, or from some sudden jar on the old timbers, all at once, without a moment's warning, the shelf gave way, dashing itself and all it upheld upon the floor. To make the work of destruction complete, the cellar floor was merely earth, now damp from the spring rains, and with boards laid along at intervals to walk on. Of course, the wettest place was underneath the shelf, and when Mrs. Weaver reached the spot she found only a sticky conglomerate of pie, cake, and mud, with scattered pebbles in the shape of biscuit rolling here and there.

She raised both hands in terror and dismay; what was to be done? But, quickly rallying, she set about making good the loss. "Now, Mary Jane," said she, briskly, to that domestic, "you and I'll have to fall to, if 't is Sunday, and cook up something for dinner. There's the minister and his wife—that's two; and Elder Cook and his wife—that's four: and the Deacon and me, and the children, makes nine; and Father and Mother Weaver—that's eleven; and some one else may drop in. Seems a pity to miss the sermon, too; and then I had laid out for to wear my new bunnet!" Regretfully—"There's so little chance for bunnets! Well, it can't be helped. Folks must eat, and ministers like their vittles just as well's other folks—better too, for anything I know to the contrary. They do say ministers and spring-chickens are death on each other. Well, well, we must make the best of it. Mary Jane, I'll clean up this muss, and you go tell the Deacon never to mind me, but go right along to church; I'll come if I can—which ain't at all likely."

Now, Mary Jane caught sight of Bill, on his way to get matches for Isaac, and being, as was natural, in something of a hurry, intrusted the message to him. Had the Deacon been anywhere in sight, no doubt the habit of obedience would have prevailed; the message would have been delivered, and the day of the week made clear. But he was in the pasture, so Bill said nothing, and the feminine part of the household were too busy to notice anything beyond their own pursuits.

Meanwhile, the Deacon did various chores to his own satisfaction, and then went to the field, where, axe in hand, he began to hack and hew at some smaller stumps in the way of the plow. The boys worked diligently. After awhile, the elder Weaver stopped, and, while wiping his face, noticed with pleasure how well the work was advancing.

"Did 'em good," he reflected, "to touch 'em up a little. They'd be hanging around the house yet if I'd let 'em." At this moment a carriage came down the road. (It should be said that the field they were ploughing adjoined the pike.)

"Brother Simmons and his family," said he to himself; "where are they going, I wonder? I must say that, in my estimation, he gads more'n is fitting for a professing member."

He applied himself again to the task of chopping. Pretty soon another carriage, then another and another, and several pedestrians passed by. The next stump brought him close to the road, and, as more people passed, he could not help perceiving that they looked at him in a very singular manner. Still, no suspicion of the real state of things dawned upon him, although he was aware of a growing and undefinable uneasiness.

So he chopped on, and Charley, in his cheerful, coming to the stump, had just uttered a loud Gee-haw! when the Deacon's uplifted arm and axe were all at once arrested. Clear, sonorous, there fell upon his ears the familiar sound of a bell. Its own weight, rather than any mental impulse on the holder's part, made the axe descend: and at this moment, as though to complete his demoralization, the minister rode by.

Charley had paused—he could not possibly help it—and Bill was gazing at his father with a world of demure amusement in his glance, when the Deacon "planted" his axe and turned towards them.

"Charles," said he, briefly, "what bell is that?"

"The church bell, sir."

"What day is this?"

"Sunday, sir," meekly responded his heir.

There was a moment's silence—silence far more eloquent than speech. It was broken by the Deacon. "Unhitch that horse," said he, dryly, "and get ready for church. Not another word was spoken. The boys did as they were told, and when next they saw their father he was entering church, rather late, in all the terrors of his go-to-meeting clothes. If he noticed the quizzical glances of his neighbors only a deeper flush than was habitual to his weather-beaten face betrayed it.

Elder Stone preached a very lengthy and instructive sermon on Lot's wife and the perils of looking back; but I doubt if the boys heard much of it, unless it might be the rather startling exhortation with which it ended. "Where fore, my brethren," said the Elder, "let us all remember Lot's wife, and how highly she was privileged." "Jerooky!" whispered Bill to Isaac, "I shouldn't think it much of a privilege to be turned into salt."

But the Deacon's trials were not yet over. At the close of the services, or, rather, just before the final hymn, it was his duty to make an announcement. He rose, but hardly with his wonted rectitude. The cloud of the morning's mistake still overshadowed him.

"Brethren," said he, "our beloved pastor is still ailing, and we must get the spiritual manna for awhile from other sources." He was aware that he stammered, but how could he help it, when all the time there was a rhythmic accompaniment in his ears of Hitch-up-the road! Burn-up the stump! Don't-say-a-word! "It's doubtful if we can have Brother Stone next Sunday," he resumed. "He'll come if he can, and we'll have meeting, the Lord willing; but two weeks from to day we'll have meeting whether or no!"

There was a faint murmur of surprise in the church, which became a rustle of decorous merriment as the Deacon, realizing the irreverent absurdity of his own words, began to amend them, stammered, grew red, and abruptly sat down. Whatever explanation he may have given when church was out, the boys did not wait to hear.

The dinner was excellent, the various guests had appreciative appetites, and no allusion was made to the mistakes and accidents of the morning. But as the Deacon helped his oldest son to roast veal, their eyes encountered. The younger orbs were more appealing than victorious; and perhaps to this absence of elation, as well as to his own sense of honor, was due the fact that Charles Weaver entered the High School the next Fall.—Eleanor C. Lewis, in Christian Union.

Evergreens on the Lawn.

The farmer who will take a little pains can easily have beautiful evergreens about his house and on the lawn. Sometimes they can be procured from the woods or some neglected pasture; but nursery-grown trees are raised so cheaply now that if a considerable number of them are desired it is often cheaper to buy them and plant in rows on one's own land for a year or two, giving good culture meanwhile, and then transplant when ready for them. They can be bought a foot or fifteen inches high, twice transplanted, for twenty dollars a thousand, or less of large dealers, and this, with a trifle for freight, is less than it will generally cost to dig them from the woods and have all the work of hauling and transplanting, followed by a loss of three fourths or more.

From the nursery the roots come packed in moss, and if well-packed and not too long on the road a large majority will grow. But they need thorough care even after planting and after growth has started, or dry weather and a hot sun may kill them in June or July. Strike a furrow in good land, fill it a third or half full of swamp-muck thrown out some time before, set the plants on this muck ten inches or a foot apart, cover the roots carefully and press down the soil, and then hoe and cultivate as often as weeds appear (or oftener) during the season. The new roots will penetrate the muck, which will retain moisture for them, and when the owner comes to transplant them in one or two years he can cut out with each plant a mass of adhering muck and earth, with little disturbance to the roots, except to cut off those which run too far away to be removed. I have removed some thousands in this way for hedge growing and the lawn, and it is a rare occurrence to have even one die. A round-pointed shovel is used for cutting out and lifting, and they are carefully laid on a "stone-boat" until it is loaded sufficiently, and then it is hauled by a quiet horse to where it is wanted. By this method there is practically no exposure of the roots, nor much disturbance of them. All transplanting is best done in cool weather, but there is little risk even should it be hot, if the work is well done. Muck, and plenty of it, will also be of use in the place where the little tree is to stand permanently.

One mistake often, perhaps generally, made by the common farmer who has been incited to plant evergreens, is to plant them in turf, and expect them at once to succeed. This is irrational, as the turf has millions of roots pumping up moisture about as fast as it comes, and any tree put into such ground stands a poor chance. If the lawn is already coated with turf, cut out a liberal space, at least eight feet across, and mulch the tree thoroughly after planting. Allow no grass to grow up to it for several years. It may take care of itself well enough after it is well established, but until then it needs care both to live and to facilitate growth.

When evergreens are planted and made to live, let the owner see to it that they branch down close to the ground and stay there. To "trim up" an evergreen as we do deciduous trees is to make monstrosities of them. For this reason they should not be planted where, when well grown, they will cut off a desirable view, but in places where they can have plenty of room, and where no sacrilegious hands are tempted to cut away their beauty and glory. If one wants them near the house it is easy enough to dwarf them by an annual cutting-back.

In general, this class of trees needs less pruning than deciduous trees, because the pyramidal form is their natural shape; but a little cutting back for some years makes them thicken up, and adds to their beauty by giving them compactness. In good soil, a tree becoming well established, the annual upward growth of a Norway Spruce will average about two feet, and the lateral growth nearly as much. Hence because they look small when planted, a miscalculation is often made as to the space required. In twenty years the lateral branches may extend twenty feet or more from the trunk in each direction. But if the branches are to be cut back at all, it should be done early. To attempt any shearing of an old and straggling tree, in order to make it look compact, will end in a failure. It is only the young tree which readily throws out a new growth when the ends of its branches are shortened. The time to prune is any time between November and April, but never after growth starts, unless one wishes to check growth.—N. Y. Examiner.

—Oat Meal for Babies: Put four tablespoonfuls of oat meal in a tin pail and pour on it three pints of cold water. Put the pail in a vessel with hot water in it and boil steadily for two hours. Then pour it into an oat meal strainer—a common sieve will do—and drain all the liquid off thoroughly. To one cup of this add one half cup of cream, two cups water and sugar enough to make it palatable. Give through a nursing bottle. Instead of the cream, if desirable, a half cup of the oat-meal water may be used. When rolled oats are used an hour's cooking is enough.—N. Y. Tribune.

His Wife Was a Jumbo.

Two Jersey City farmers, Hiram Bauman and Christopher Kaufman, were arranged at the Tombs to answer a charge of intoxication.

"Please, sir, let us go this time," exclaimed the former, "we"—

"Hold your horse, Hiram," interrupted his friend, "and let me do the chinning, for you might say too much and spoil all. Judge, we are two hard-working farmers, and our old gals are watching anxiously for us to come home. Cheer up our hearts, sir and let us depart."

"Your wives know where you went, why should they feel anxious over your absence?" asked the justice.

"If you knew my old woman you wouldn't ask me such a question," answered Christopher. "We told our wives that we were going to a dying lodge member's bedside, and I suppose when we didn't turn up last night they went there and learned that we had lied. That suggests to me another reason why you should discharge us."

"And what is that?"

"You ain't a married man, Judge, or you'd know. I ain't afraid of my old woman, for she's little, but goodness help my friend, Hiram. His wife is a Jumbo."

They were discharged.—N. Y. World.

CURE OF PAIN IN BACK AND STIFF NECK.

101 ADELPHI STREET, BROOKLYN, N. Y., February 20, 1884.

I have had pain in my back for years and it troubled me night and day. I could get no relief, not even for an hour. At last, hearing so much of ALLCOCK'S PLASTERS, I tried two. In three hours the pain began to decrease; in twelve hours I was entirely relieved. I continued wearing the Plasters a week, and was entirely cured. I also used them for a stiff neck, which ALLCOCK'S PLASTERS cured in four hours.

THE NARROW ESCAPE

Of a Massachusetts Engineer—Timely Warning of Mr. John Spencer, Baggage-master of B. & A. R. R.

Sleep after fatigue, and health after disease, are two of the sweetest experiences known to man. Fourteen years is a long time in which to suffer, yet Mr. Peter Lawler, of Dalton, Mass., had led a miserable life for that period through the presence of stone in the bladder. That he sought in all directions for a cure is an almost superfluous statement. He did obtain temporary relief, but nothing more. Last January he called on Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who said, after examination: "Mr. Lawler, you have stone in the bladder. We will first try DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY before risking an operation." A few days later the following letter passed through the Rondout post-office:

DALTON, Mass., Feb. 6.

"Dear Dr. Kennedy—The day after I came home I passed two gravel stones, and am doing nicely now. PETER LAWLER."

Dr. Kennedy now has the stones at his office, and they are sufficiently formidable to justify the claim that KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY is the leading specific for stone in the bladder. In his letter Mr. Lawler mentions that FAVORITE REMEDY also cured him of rheumatism. The subjoined certificate tells its own story:

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME IX. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4, 1884. NUMBER 31.

SAW-MILL CAUSUALTY.

Two Boilers in a Mill in Michigan Explode.

Three Men Instantly Killed While at Work--A Wife's Fatal Grief.

DETROIT, MICH., May 31.—On Friday afternoon two boilers in a mill belonging to Wood & Taylor, one mile East of McBride's, Montcalm County, exploded, and literally demolished the mill. Wesley Aminon, the foreman, Augustus Newman, and Mathews were in the engine room at the time of the explosion and were instantly killed. Their bodies were removed from the ruins in a terribly mutilated condition. Charles Sauers, head sawyer, had his arm broken and was badly, and it is feared fatally, injured. Peter Cramer was badly injured about the head and back, but is likely to recover. Joseph McCullough and Wm. Dryson were also badly injured. It is reported that the wife of one of the men killed cut her throat last night and killed herself, being crazed by the sudden terrible shock.

IN THE RUINS.

Six Men Instantly Killed, Three Seriously Injured and Two Others Missing.

BALTIMORE, MD., May 30.—The handsome Cheatstone-front warehouse No. 37 South Gay street, occupied by William E. Hooper & Sons, proprietors of the cotton-mills at ... , Md., and used by them as a storage warehouse, collapsed with a crash at two o'clock this afternoon, burying Mortimer Liuthicum, James Kelly, James and Eddie Bowen (colored), Kenneth McLea, Gildea Hook, Benjamin Greenwood, Walter Cochran, Henry Seving and James Martin in the ruins. Linthicum, Kelly, McLea, Hook and the two Bowens were killed. Greenwood, Cochran and Martin were seriously hurt, while the others escaped with but slight injuries. The escape of any of the above was a miracle, as the entire fourth floor fell to the cellar without a moment's warning. The spectacle presented after the disaster was appalling. Only a portion of the front wall was left standing, while the entire interior of the building was filled with debris. The second-story front room of the building was occupied as an office by Long & Dugall, dealers in fertilisers. When the crash came Benjamin Greenwood, bookkeeper; Gildea Hook, shipping-clerk, and Kenneth McLea, traveling salesman of the firm, were sitting in the office conversing. Greenwood saw the ceiling part in the middle, and called to the others to run for their lives. The alarm was heeded instantly, but none succeeded in escaping. The cause of the disaster is not definitely known. Some attribute it to the immense quantity of cotton stored in the fifth story of the warehouse, which forced out the front wall. Others say it was caused by the explosion of the air-chamber of the hydraulic elevator. The loss is estimated at about $50,000.

A Fiendish Joke.

LONDON, OHIO, May 31.—Last night, while Prof. Hertigs, a phrenologist, was delivering a lecture at Danville, a small village two miles south of this place, Noah Mitchell and some other roughs who invest the village poured some chloroform and other drugs through the ventilators into the school-room where the lecture was being given, and the large crowd present soon became asphyxiated from the inhalation of the irrespirable gases. Some of them came near dying from suffocation. The three-year-old daughter of Scott Robison, it is thought, can not recover, while the others are still under the care of Dr. Deem, who was compelled to remain up during all the night attending the sufferers. The fiend who placed the drugs there has been arrested and bound over to Court, and in case of the death of either of the persons affected there will probably be some lynching in the neighborhood of Danville. No cause is assigned for the terrible deed.

Sealing Vessel on an Ice Floe.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., May 30.—The Newfoundland sealing brig Confederate, Captain Thomas Greene, of Harbor Grace, with a crew of seventy-nine men, was caught in a formidable ice nip in Notre Dame Bay April 28, and thrown completely on the floe. The ship lies over on her side, with her yard-arms on the ice. On the 20th of May five of the crew volunteered to travel to land, distant nearly twenty miles, and report the situation. At imminent peril, and in an exhausted condition, they reached Twillingat, boarded the steamer Hercules, and arrived here this evening. They report all provisions consumed except bread, and the last pound of fuel exhausted. There is a frozen ocean of ice all around, and as the ship thus beset is now drifting out to sea, there is danger of the whole crew being starved to death. A powerful sealing steamship will be at once dispatched to the rescue. Captain Cross, of the steamer Hercules, reports ice to the eastward of Notre Dame Bay as far as the eye can reach, and innumerable icebergs.

Triple Drowning.

CINCINNATI, May 30.—This afternoon a flatboat containing Philip and "Red" Hempton, aged fourteen and twelve, respectively; James Kennedy, aged twenty-two; and Fred Hell, aged eleven years, was moored out in the river, where Kennedy was fishing. The boys began skylarking, and caused the boat to be upset, and all but Hell were drowned. That lad only escaped by a hair's breath. He went under a barge, and when he came up on the other end was seized by Daniel Goodman, the watchman of the United States steamer Lily, which was lying in the vicinity of the disaster.

Alleged Bank Robber Arrested.

MILWAUKEE, May 31.—D. C. O. Howard, charged with robbing the bank at Monmouth, Ill., of $150,000, was arrested at Waukesha to-day on a telegram from the Monmouth authorities. He confesses his identity, but is reticent regarding the crime.

A Swindler Caught.

NEW YORK, May 30.—Porrin H. Sumner, broker, has been arrested on the charge of swindling Daniel M. Davidson, late of West Virginia, out of over $10,000. He has been committed for examination.

A TOUR SPOILED.

John C. Eno Arrested When About to Sail For Europe.

NEW YORK, May 31.—A special from Montreal says that John C. Eno was arrested last evening at Quebec, on the steamer Vancouver, which sails to-day for Liverpool. Detective Fahey has been on his track since Friday, following him from Ottawa to Toronto, Montreal, and Quebec. He arrived at Moutreal Thursday, put up at a private boarding house under the name of McLosky, visited the offices of several brokers, and inquired for New York quotations. He will arrive here by the Quebec boat to-morrow morning. Lawyers believe he can not be held under arrest, as he is only charged with the misappropriation of money, not an extraditable offense. A large amount of money and bonds were in his posession. Eno, the ex-president of the National Bank, who was arrested at Quebec, declines to return to this city voluntarily. Superintendent Walling says he did not order his arrest.

The Morganatic Wife's Demands.

LONDON, May 31.—Mme. Kolemine is still in Berlin. All attempts, thus far, to get her to go quietly away and forget her royal husband have failed. She will listen to nothing short of a full recognition of her marital rights, and insists that she shall be either accepted as a wife and maintained as one, or placed fairly before the world in a divorce suit. In reference to the latter proposition, it is stated on good authority, that Mme. Kolemine has offered to facilitate, as far as may be consistent with her claims, a suit for a seperation, if she is guaranteed an annuity of £10,000. This proposal is probably made in the hope that Queen Victoria will take pity on her indiscreet son-in-law, and help the Grand Duke out of his present entanglement by loosening her purse strings to the tune of income which Mme. Kolemine deems necessary to her comfort. In England, however, such a contingency is laughed at, and it is prophesied that Louis IV. will remain married a long time before Her Majesty releases him at the rate of £10,000 a year.

A BURSTING CLOUD

Floods A Western Cattle Ranch and Drowns Eleven Cowboys.

DENVER, COL., May 31.—A cattle roundup camp, on Frenchmen Creek, near the Nebraska and Colorado line, was destroyed by the flood on Thursday. Eleven cowboys, belonging to Colorado and Nebraska outfits were drowned. The flood was caused by a cloudburst, the water coming with such force that it swept everything in its path. Men, horses, wagons, and camping outfits, were all carried down the stream with such force that but few escaped. The names of the missing are Len Witherbee, J. Lindsey, Robert Roddy, Robert Fowler, Patrick Lynch, John Smith, L. Netherton, William Ferguson, Wm. J. Pelton, and C. Hell. The bodies of the last four have been recovered.

The Penn Bank Failure.

PITTSBURG, May 30.—An intimate friend of George W. Rowley, individual bookkeeper of the Penn Bank, for him, made a statement to-day that the checks of D. Wilson & Co., and Watson & Co., the mythical firms, were drawn and signed by President Riddle, and that the latter represented all these firms. He says the blind pool lost over $4,000,000 in oil, and that the overdrafts on the bank aggregate $1,300,000. Riddle, who at one time possessed $40,000, has lost it in oil. Thos. J. Watson, an oil broker, whose account was overdrawn $97,000, left suddenly this evening with his wife, and detectives have been shadowing his house for two days. Telegrams have been sent East to arrest him for conspiracy. There is great excitement to-night, and other arrests are expected.

Garfield Memorial Hospital.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—The Garfield Memorial Hospital, corner of Boundary and Tenth streets, was formally opened at three o'clock this afternoon in the presence of a distinguished assemblage, including Mr. Justice Miller President of the Hospital Association, and Messrs. H. A. Williard, Reginald Fendal, E. Francis Rigg, Dr. S. C. Buzy, Mrs. John A. Logan, Mrs. H. W. Blair, Mrs. Benj. Harrison, Mrs. J. B. Ricketts, and Miss Frelinghuysen. The dedicatory address was followed by a garden party. A number of tents were erected on the lawn. The grounds were brilliantly illuminated by hundreds of lights an several calcium lights at night.

BURIED ALIVE.

A Victim of the Warehouse Accident Found Lying in the Ruins.

BALTIMORE, May 31.—Up to one o'clock to-day no more dead bodies were recovered from the ruins of the warehouse on South Gay street. The front wall on Gay street was pulled down, and the workmen are clearing the wreck. It is not probable that any of the bodies will be reached to-day, as a vast quantity of heavy timbers, stone, and bales of cotton goods are wedged together to the depth of several stories. At two o'clock the workmen unexpectedly reached a point where they could see Gildea Hook. He was still alive and stimulants were administered to keep him alive until the wreck could be removed enough to take him out.

Insanity and Murder.

WAUSAU, WIS., May 31.—G. W. Thayer, book-keeper of the Marathon County Bank, is to-night in jail a raving maniac, guilty of murder. While at his desk today, apparently in his right mind, he shot and killed, without provocation, Fred Beals, the young bank messenger. Thayer then rushed into the street, crying: "I have killed him." His crime and subsequent madness are unaccountable.

Snow-Storm in the East.

BUFFALO, May 30.—There was quite a heavy snow-storm along the Lake Shore route this morning. Trains arriving were covered and a few flakes fell here.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., May 30.—The thermometer last night was down to 25°, freezing fruits and vegetables of all sorts in Dutchess and Ulster counties. The grape crop is fully half destroyed. The estimated loss is several hundred thousand dollars.

SHOT TO DEATH.

A Terrible Affair Between Two Illinois Farmers.

Otto Hope Murdered by a Neighbor, and His Hired Hand Mortally Wounded.

AURORA, ILL., June 1.—Five miles east of this city, on the Prairie street road, lives Ozias W. Fletcher. With him lives his son, Merritt Fletcher, who is twenty-five years of age. Half a mile south of the Fletcher farm, on the Galena road, lived until to-day Otto Hope, a German. Hope had in his employ a young German named Ello Steinburn. Both Fletcher and Hope are farmers. Each owns a large herd of cows, and neither has grazing land sufficiant for the wants of his stock. Between the two farms is a newly-opened road running north and south, conecting the Galena and Prairie street roads. This road has for some time furnished common grasing ground for the herds of Fletcher and Hope. The men have had trouble at various times over their claims to the use of the road as a pasture ground, and this trouble culminated in murder this morning. When the two herds were driven into the road Saturday morning the two Fletchers assaulted Steinburn and beat him. Hope accompanied Steinburn this morning when the herd was driven to the road in the expectation of meeting Fletcher and coming to an understanding in regard to the use of the land. They met Fletcher and his son about midway in the disputed territory. But a few moments' talk had ensued when ... der Fletcher drew a knife and advanced on Hope. Steinburn seized Fletcher's arm and held him. Young Fletcher, who was sitting on the fence, here sprang to the ground, drew a revolver and fired. Steinburn fell, shot through the hip. Fletcher fired two more shots, striking Hope in the side and breast and killing him instantly. The murderer then turned to the prostrate Steinburn and, to make his work sure, fired another shot into his breast. The two Fletchers then left the spot. Steinburn then crawled to the house of Joseph Ingham, about a quarter of a mile distant, where he was cared for. In the meantime Fletcher and his son had gone to the house of a doctor in the neighborhood, and returned with him to Ingham's house. The physician says Steinburn can not live. The Fletchers were arrested and jailed. There is strong talk of lynching the younger Fletcher.

The Garfield Memorial Hospital.

WASHINGTON, June 1.—The Garfield Memorial Hospital, which was dedicated here last week with appropriate ceremonies, has received a number of liberal donations, in the form of free beds. Among the donors is Mrs. Alex. Graham Bell, who donates $1,000 for a memorial bed, to be known as the Schuyler Johnson Bell Bed. The contribution of $1,000 entitles the donor to name a bed in perpetuity and to designate the patient who shall occupy it. The wife of Representative Hitt, of Illinois, donated two beds which will be named respectfully William Hitt and Reynolds Hitt, for her two sons. The wife of ex-Senator Pomeroy also two beds. Mrs. Theodore Lyman, of Massachusetts, and Mrs. Freeman, of Washington, each gave a bed, and another was given jointly by three Washington ladies. Miss Coleman, of this city, and Mrs. Walcott, wife of the owner of the Oneida Mills, New York, contributed all the bed linen needed for the hospital, and the Wallington and Middleton plate companies of Connecticut contributed a sufficient quantity of silver-plated ware to supply the entire hospital.

New Irish Land Bill.

LONDON, June 1.—The new Irish land bill, introduced on Tuesday by Mr. Trevelyan, in a speech which everybody praises, is in substance a generous measure, by which the Irish peasantry will be enabled to become the absolute owners of their farms by paying yearly for forty years a sum less than what they now pay for rent, the Government undertaking to advance a hundred millions for this purpose. Mr. Parnell reserves his decision, but it is understood that he intends to oppose it, on the pretext that the country is made liable for security for these advances, but really because a bill of that scope takes the land question out of his hands as a lever for further agitation. The Parnellite papers have denounced the bill.

A Whole Family Swept Away.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 1.—The Chronicle's Visalia, Cal., special says: A cloud-burst near here last night broke with such fury as to sweep away the house of Peter Stewart and all of its inmates, consisting of himself, his wife, mother and two children, and R. Weisner, a sheep-herder, were drowned. The bodies of Stewart and his mother and one child were recovered to day. They were frightfully mangled, and their clothes were torn into shreds. Weisner is injured beyond recovery.

Boy Burned to Death.

INDEPENDENCE, MO., June 1.—Cornelius Smith, a colored boy, nephew of Frank Noland, was burned up in the house of the latter last night in this city. The body was past recognition. Cause of fire unknown. The house was a total loss. Other members of the family were slightly burned.

Couldn't Stand the Disgrace.

SCRANTON, PA., June 1.—Michael Ley, aged forty-two, killed himself to-day. He was formerly a dry goods man in San Francisco. He left a note saying he couldn't stand the disgrace of being a poor man.

Balloon Car Falls.

PARIS, June 1.—At Lille to-day, the car of a captive balloon, containing twenty persons, fell forty meters. Three occupants were killed outright, and the remainder severely injured.

—Ex-Governor Leland Stanford's withdrawal of all his horses from the turf for the season of 1884 is the result of the death of his only son in Italy, and his life seems to be completely changed by his great affliction.—San Francisco Call.

—An old bay fisherman says that lobsters in the New York Bay and financial panics throughout the country always come together once in seven years. He has watched the coincidence for more than forty years, and declares that it never fails. This is lobster year.

XLVIIIth CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—SENATE—Several petitions were presented opposing Government assumption of telegraphic functions. Mr. Slater, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported favorably the bill to forfeit the grant of land along the uncompleted portion of the Northern Pacific Railroad. Mr. Hill submitted a report from the Committee on Post-offices and Post-roads on the subject of a postal telegraph. Mr. Lapham submitted a report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the Danville investigation. Mr. Vance is preparing a minority report. Mr. Saulsbury submitted a minority report of the Copiah County investigation. Mr. Ingalls introduced a bill to provide for the sale of lands belonging to the prairie land of Pottowattomie Indians.

HOUSE.—The Speaker appointed Messrs. Dibrell, Williams and White (Minn.) as the Conference Committee on the agricultural bill. Mr. Ellis called up the joint resolution appropriating a further sum of $100,000 for the relief of the sufferers by the overflow in the Mississippi River and its tributaries. Passed. The House then resumed consideration of the Wallace-McKinley contested election case. A vote was taken upon the minority resolution declaring McKinley entitled to the seat. It was lost—yeas 108, nays 158. The majority resolution, seating Wallace, was adopted without division, and that gentleman appeared and took the oath of office. Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—SENATE.—A bill was reported favorably to reimburse the several States for interest paid on war loans. The Mexican Pensions Bill was then taken up. Senator Cullom reported from the Committee on Pensions a bill conferring a pension upon all persons who served three months during the war and have honorable discharges and who are or shall become disabled from any cause not the result of their own gross carelessness, disreputable conduct or vicious habits, and shall also be dependent wholly or in part upon their own labor or ... assistance from others for means of a comfortable support.

HOUSE.—Mr. Cobb, of Indiana, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported the bill to forfeit unearned land granted the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company. House calender. The morning hour was dispensed with, and the House went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Cox in the chair, on the Legislative Bill. It reduces the number of Internal Revenue Collection Districts from eighty-four to sixty-three and increases the force in the Pension Office. Adjourned until Monday.

WASHINGTON, May 29—SENATE.—Mr. Beck presented a memorial from the Managers of the Southern Exposition at Louisville, asking an appropriation of $25,000 on account of Government exhibits. Mr. Voorhees presented a memorial from citizens of Indiana, praying that General John C. Fremont be placed on the retired list. Mr. Allison reported from the Committee on Appropriation $100,000 for the relief of sufferers by the overflow of the Mississippi and tributaries. The Senate Committee do not favor the appropriation in the form presented, nor the amount mentioned. They recommend the appropriation of the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for the Ohio River sufferers.

HOUSE.—The Speaker announced the following announcements: Slocum, Dibble and Dingers, conferees on Shipping Bill. Dorsheimer, Tucker, Reagan, Collins, Eldridge, Bingham, Cannon and Laird, a commission on part of the House to make arrangements for the dedication of the Washington Monument. Hammond, Rogers (Arkansas), Henley, Riggs, Bayne, Wakefield and Millard, select committee to inquire whether any ex-members have abused the privileges of the floor. The bill to prevent the patenting of unearned land grants was ordered printed and recommended. Bills reported and placed on the calendar: Regulating the forms of bills of lading; regulating the exportation of imitation butter and cheese; to divide the Judicial District of Kansas; a joint resolution proposing the following as article sixteen of the Constitution: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be abridged by the United States or by any State on account of nativity." A bill was reported increasing to $1,000,000 the limit of the appropriation for a public building at Louisville, Ky. Referred to the Committee on the Whole. The House went in Committee of the Whole, Mr. Cox, of N. Y., in the Chair, on the Legislative bill. Adjourned until Saturday.

WASHINGTON, May 31.—SENATE.—Senate not in session.

HOUSE.—A bill was passed restoring the law of 1867 in the matters of appeals from Circuit Courts to the U. S. Supreme Court in habeas corpus cases. This law was repealed a few years ago while the McArdle case, from Mississippi was pending before the Supreme Court. Mr. Perkins (Kas.) reported a bill granting the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad Company. House calender. On motion of Mr. Wellborn (Tex.) the resolution was adopted authorizing the Committee on Indian Affairs to investigate all matters touching the leasing, sub-leasing and fencing of lands in the Indian Territory and a disbursement of $300,000 appropriated for the Cherokee Nation during the Forty seventh Congress. A bill granting the right of way through the Indian Territory to the gulf to the Colorado and Santa Fe Railroad Company gave rise to a good deal of discussion. It was finally passed, after its consideration had consumed a greater part of the day. A bill was also passed granting the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Southern Kansas Railroad Company. A bill was considered authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to obtain from the Red Lake Chippewa Indians a cession of a portion of the Red Lake reservation in Minnesota, but without final action the House adjourned.

Frightful Work of a Cloud-Burst.

VISALIA, CAL., June 1.—The cloud burst near here last night broke with such fury as to sweep away the house of Peter Stewart and all the inmates, consisting of himself, wife, mother and two children, and R. Weisner, a sheep herder. The bodies of Stewart, mother and one child were recovered to-day, frightfully mangled and their clothes torn into shreds. Weisner is injured beyond recovery. The house was dashed to atoms.

Papal Bull Against Masonry.

LONDON, June 1.—A papal encyclical was read to-day in the churches of England warning the people against joining secret societies, under pain of excommunication. The letter says Freemasonry, at its inception, was probably merely a friendly society, but if so, it asks, where was the necessity for blind obedience demanded of its votaries?

Three Amateur Aeronauts Killed.

PARIS, June 1.—At Lille to-day the car of a captive balloon, containing twenty persons, fell a distance of forty meters. Three of the occupants were killed outright and the remainder were seriously injured.

Murder by a Bloodthirsty Convict.

PHILADELPHIA, May 31.—James Taylor, a convict who killed Keeper Doran in Moyamensing Prison to-day, is known to have stabbed seventeen persons.

—A man in Wilcox County, Ala., has a remarkable tree growing in his yard. It is of the China species, is ten feet in circumference, and its top has been blown away by a storm, but six and one half feet up the trunk of this tree two more China trees have sprouted, taken root, and grown up as high as the old tree is and just half a foot further up the trunk of the old original tree a peach tree has taken root, grown up to fair dimensions, and is now filled with fruit. At another place there is a blackberry vine and also an elm bush, all in a flourishing condition.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

In Burley tobacco of low and medium grades the demand has varied occasionally, and on the whole has been more reserved. These grades have declined, with occasional fluctuations 50c@$1 per hundred lbs., the principal fall being in medium fillery leaf. Good leaf has also weakened to some extent, and fine leaf has not been tested. Dark and heavy styles have met a healthy, well distributed demand, both from the domestic trade and from shippers. Prices have ruled firm for leaf. Numerous sales of Green river leaf have been made at prices decidedly favorable to sellers. Regie and other styles dependent on the foreign trade have been fully supported. Lugs have been steady, and low grades have sold to somewhat better advantage than a fortnight ago. There have been additional planting seasons, and gratifying progress is making in starting the crop. Only a small perceutage has been planted, but in a few isolated cases planters have set out the entire acreage allotted to this crop. We quote full weight packages of new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

AN unsuccessful attempt was made by officers the other night to arrest Henry Hamner, Henry Wade and Nathan Thorpe who have been lurking near the residence of Wilson Hamner, Henry Hamner's father, who lives two miles back of Junction City, in the Knobbs. These young men are charged with robbing and murdering Loftus Burns on the 11th of April last, a bachelor Irishmen, who lived by himself in the out skirts of the little town of Bennettsville Hancock County. In attempting to make the arrest Thorpe was wounded by the officers in the hip, and Hamner slightly in the side, but all three of the fugitives escaped, owing to their thorough knowledge of the country, they having been raised in that county. Miles Chaney, alias Marion Coffey another accomplice, was arrested soon after the murder, and making a full confession, was given a life sentence in the Penitentiary by the Circuit Court of Hancock County, then in session.

UNITED STATES Engineer, Sublett, has a party engaged in surveying the Kentucky River for the location of locks and dams all the way up to the Three Forks, placing a dam for every thirteen feet of rise. It will thus require about nine additional dams to complete the navigation to the point mentioned. The lock at present highest on the river is at Clifton, and the next highest will be in the neighborhood of High Bridge, twenty-one miles further up stream. To Shaker Ferry, just below the bridge, the rise is eleven and one-half feet, and to the mouth of Dix River, just above the bridge, it is twelve feet. The dam will not be more than half a mile below the ferry, or more than a mile above Dix River. There is good rock bottom all along this distance on which to construct durable works.

Being slightly deaf he did not notice them, and consequently, was caught between them and squeesed about the person.

MR. HENRY C. MCCONNELL, one of the most prominent and wealthiest men of Woodford County, died at Versailles, a few days ago. He retired with his wife at the usual time, and nothing was known to be the matter until his wife arose in the morning, when she found him unconscious. She immediately summoned a physician, but in less than two hours he died from apoplexy. He carried $30,000 insurance on his life.

A COLLISION occurred on the C. & O. road a few days ago, between a construction train and a freight train, near Priceburg. John W. Thompson, of Huntington, Va., engineer of the construction train, was so badly hurt that he died at the railroad hospital at Paducah that night.

COMMERCIAL LAW.

Brief Digests of Late Decisions.

[Compiled Specially for the Midland Industrial Gazette, St. Louis, Mo.]

CONSIGNMENT OF GOODS—ATTEMPTED FRAUD OF BUYER—REPLEVIN BY CONSIGNEE.

Wagons were made in Cincinnati and then sent to Michigan. The bill of lading to the purchaser was attached to the draft sent to the local bank for collection. The purchaser applied to the bank for leave to examine the wagons, and then removed them to his store, where he undertook to sell them. The President of the bank attached the goods in the name of makers, but it being shown that this was done without authority, the suit was discontinued, the attachment dissolved and the property returned to the purchaser. The bank then paid the draft and brought an action of replevin, and upon that got judgment. The purchaser carried the case to the Supreme Court, where the judgment was affirmed. Judge Campbell, in the opinion, said: "The payment of the draft was not made upon behalf of the defendant, and we see no reason why the bank has not the same right now that it would have had if the draft had been cashed by it on receipt. It represented the debt on the payment of which the bank was authorized to deliver the property, and it was practically a bailee of the property to obtain the payment and hold it until paid. We think that whether it paid the makers of the draft in advance or not could not concern the defendant, who could not lawfully hold the property sold against it or the manufacturers of the wagons. In our opinion the transaction is such as to give the bank all the rights the owners of the wagons had in them. Such dealings can not be subjected to any technical niceties, but must be decided on common sense grounds."—West Michigan Savings Bank vs. Howard, Supreme Court of Michigan.

TRADE MARK—INJUNCTIONS—USE OF LIKE NAME.

Manufacturers of hair pins did business under the name of D. F. Tayler & Co., and the pins were well known and had a ready sale as "D. F. Tayler's Hair Pins," and as D. F. Tayler & Co.'s Hair Pins," and the device on the packages, which were made up in pink and yellow papers, were exclusively used by them. Other persons who also made hair pins, got the use of the name of one L. B. Taylor to put on their wrappers and printed on them "L. B. Taylor & Co." adding the words, "Cheshire, Conn., and using the same colored papers. In a suit brought for an injunction to restrain the latter the Supreme Court of Errors, of Connecticut, decided in favor of the plaintiffs. Judge Pardee, in the opinion, said: "Though the defendants adopted the label and device and used the colored papers in good faith, believing that they were not infringing plaintiff's rights, yet an injunction must be granted. Purchasers who read the entire trade-mark could not be misled, but it is a matter of common knowledge that many persons are in a greater or less degree careless and unwary in the matter of purchasing articles for their own use; still, their patronage is not for that reason less profitable to the manufacturer, and when such persons have knowledge of the good qualities of the plaintiff's hair pins and desire to purchase them, the law will not permit the defendants to mislead them. Now, the use of a like name, which was purchased solely for use in this connection, with the other adjuncts, are well calculated to deceive these careless and unwary purchasers, to the serious injury the plaintiff, and they should have the injunction they ask for."

SALE—WARRANTY OF THING SOLD.

A bought from B. two horses, and they died of Spanish fever or Texas mange. He sued upon an alleged warranty that the horses were "all right, sound and free from disease," and he complained that they were infected with the disease of which they died when they were delivered to him. The defendant said that he had only expressed an opinion as to the health of the animals. The plaintiff was beaten, and he carried the judgment to the Supreme Court of Nebraska, where he was again defeated. The Chief Justice, Lake, in the opinion, said: "In determining whether a warranty was intended to be given a decisive test is whether the vendor assumes to assert a fact of which the buyer is ignorant, or merely states an opinion or judgment upon a matter of which the vendor has no special knowledge and on which the buyer may be expected also to have an opinion, and to exercise his judgment. When the language of the warranty is such that it amounts unquestionably to a warranty, its legal effect can not be defeated by any secret intention of the seller, and where the evidence bears no doubt of the legal force of the representation the court may and should declare its effect; but should there be a doubt the jury must determine the meaning and effect of the words."

LIABILITY FOR INJURY.

L. & G. were the owners of 200 pieces of timber, which they caused their servant to pile on a vacant lot in such a manner that the top of the pile fell off and killed the son of B., who, as administrator, brought suit and was awarded judgment in the lower courts. An appeal to the Kentucky Court of Appeals the lower court was restrained in the following opinion: "The owner of land may retain to himself the sole and exclusive use and occupation of it, but a due regard for the welfare and rights of others makes the owner liable for the negligent use of his property, whereby the person or property of another is injured."

LIABILITY FOR CORPORATE DEBTS.

In the opinion of the City Court, New York: "If a manufacturing corporation created under the laws of New Jersey has no office or place of business in that State, and opens an office and transacts business in the City of New York, the incorporators are personally liable for all debts contracted in the corporate name. The charter in such a case does not fit the company, and the incorporators by going outside of it can not screen themselves from personal responsibility."

We are authorized to announce
J. Q. WARD,
of Harrison county, as a candidate for Judge of the Superior Court, from the 3rd Superior Court district, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Reid. Subject to the action of the Democratic party.

We are authorized to announce
DR. JAMES S. BROWN,
of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23d Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

The dark horses at Chicago are getting restless about now.

SHERIFF Clutterbuck will be a candidate for reelection.

THE Circuit Court is in session in Grant, trying to correct the ways of the evil doers.

Winchester is the center of attraction for Democrat politicians of eastern Kentucky to day.

THE newspaper correspondents at Chicago nominate Arthur one day and Blaine the next.

THE Democrats will soon know what candidate they will have to defeat for the Presidency.

CINCINNATI for festivals and Chicago for conventions. The latter are the most profitable, too.

THE last legislature passed more laws of a general nature than any of its predecessors for years.

THE entire delegation from Nebraska to the National Convention is for Tilden and Hendricks.

THE Owenton people are excited over what they construe to be a prospect of becoming a railroad town.

THE cry in all directions among the Democrats is Tilden, and the old man is growing younger every day.

IF the tobacco crop continues to increase in Kentucky, material for making whisky is going to grow scarce.

A Fine Alderney cow, belonging to Judge Breck, of Richmond, produced eighteen and two-thirds pounds of butter in one week.

IF Blaine is defeated at Chicago this week, and does not retire from the field as a candidate for President he should be branded as an old stager.

MEXICO wants to borrow $20,000,000. The Kentucky Press Association ought to be called together and the loan negotiated.—Bowling Green Gazette.

THE Southern Exposition at Louisville this year bids fare to surpass in splendor and patronage that of last year. The exposition comes high but it must be had.

INSTEAD of quarreling about the tariff, the democrats should be working for a reconciliation of all the party factions. That is the road to success in the Presidential campaign.

THE National Republican Convention is now in session in Chicago. In instructions Arthur and Blaine were the favorites, but some times the field has the winners, and the prize is not secured until the heats are concluded.

THE new school law seems to be afflicted with some inconsistences, but the people should endeavor to make it operate till a chance is had to remedy the defects. The law is an improvement on the old one in many respects.

WITHOUT further legislation the Superior Court will cease to exist in September, 1886. An election to fill the present vacancy must be ordered by the Governor within six weeks after he is officially notified of the death of Judge Reid.

THE jury that tried George Oliver in Cincinnati, last week, returned a verdict for murder in the first degree. Oliver is the man that Irwin Ealsly assisted to capture in this county last winter. Cincinnati juries now have no trouble in determining what kind of punishment to say is demanded.

BOONE is one of the wealthiest counties in the State, and she should not lose the opportunity of making a display of her productions at the Louisville exposition this fall. A very creditable exhibit could be had with but little inconvenience to any of her citizens. Let the effort be made.

BETWEEN the mouth of Woolper and Middle Creek there has been a very great change in the county in the last few years. Many new farm residences have been built, one town much improved and another built from the stump. Verily that section of the county is enjoying a substantial boom.

THE new school law makes the pay of the County Superintendent a very uncertain quantity, but if he keeps an account of the time he is engaged in the duties of the office, and presents his account in proper shape, the Court of Claims will, doubtless, allow him a fair and just compensation for his labor.

THE canvass for Appellate Judge in the eastern district has torn open several old sores, and the public have been bored with the publications of cards setting forth private grievencies, which have nothing whatever to do with the merits of the candidates seeking the office. Such things are too often dragged into political contests in Kentucky.

ARTHUR'S delegates are largely men who depend on the government for their bread and butter, and the fear of losing their offices in case of his defeat, will unite them so firmly that it will be difficult to break his ranks. But this element arrayed against the other candidates in the convention may produce a union of their forces and the overthrow of Arthur.

THE Judicial Convention which meets in Winchester to-day can do a good thing for Kentucky polities by setting down on Judge Hargis in such a manner that he can not fail to realize that he does not politically own eastern Kentucky. Hargis' position in the canvass for Appellate Judge in that district demonstrates that if he can not rule he will do all in his power to ruin. Such political renegrades as Hargis are nuisances in any party with which they affiliate.

THOSE interested in a good school in the Morgan Academy should now commence negotiations for a teacher Don't wait till the time for the school to commence and then have to accept the services of any one that shall chance to come along. Last fall and winter clearly demonstrated that a good teacher at this point will receive a liberal patronage from the beginning, and good teachers can be secured. The number of scholars convenient and the wealth of the locality demand a good school in that institution.

THE following statistics were culled from the Assessor's book for this year:

Acres of land	119,431	value	$3,775,647
Town lots	578	value	222,280
Horses and mares	3,723	value	170,590
Mules	685	value	39,450
Sheep	20,598	value	53,700
Hogs	13,705	value	39,967
Cattle	6,227	value	105,040
Stores		value	77,090
Equalization			$626,042
Carriages			12,540
Silverware			2,819
Sheep killed by dogs			172
Value of sheep killed by dogs			$710
Pounds of tobacco			2,557,695
Tons of hay			8,815
Bushels of corn			486,818
Bushels of barley			35
Number of dogs			1,705
Number of sluts			141

It seems that the barley crop is about abandoned in the county, while the new dog law has produced an abundant crop of canines, which a tax of 50 cents on each dog and $1 on each slut will produce money enough to pay the damages they have done the sheep.

THE negro in Kentucky, notwithstanding the slavery clause in the State constitution, has no reason to complain of his status as fixed by the laws and institutions of the State. There is no longer any distinction as to race or color in the common school laws, except that separate schools must be maintained. This year the colored people will be allowed to elect District Trustees of their own number. The last legislature made provisions for the accommodation of blind and deaf and dumb negroes, equal to that furnished to unfotunate white people. With the right to vote, hold office, serve as jurors, manage their own schools, and to be admitted to all the public charitable institutions, the colored man and brother in Kentucky has all the encouragement which the State can give him to become a useful and prosperous citizen. It may be added that no where in the State will the white population be found to interfere with his efforts in this direction.—Louisville Commercial.

CINCINNATI'S festivals, this year, have been unprofitable.

IN this issue will be found the announcement of Dr. Jas. S. Brown, of Warsaw, as a candidate for State Senator, from this, the 23d Senatorial District, composed of the counties of Owen, Boone and Gallatin.

The Warsaw Independent says:

"By an agreement entered into by the counties it was decided to permit each county to have the selection of the Senator in turn. The honor is due our county for the next term, and Doctor Brown presents his name for the consideration of the Democratic party. In the official positions Dr. Brown has occupied, he has left a clean record, not the slightest stain being discernable. As County Judge of this county, he made an excellent official, to which all can testify who were brought in connection with him during his holding that position. He comes before the people with all the endowments of an intelligent, conscientious gentleman, and if these qualifications are what is desired in our next Senator by the people of this district, then Dr. Brown deserves their support. Should the party select Dr. Brown as their representative in the next Senate, he will perform that duty in a manner that characterizes the true public servant—discharging the duties of the office for the best advantage of his constituency.

MR. FRANK COX, of Aurora, sent to our office a bottle containing a sample of the oil which has been discovered oozing from the ground near the large brewery on the river bank at that place. It was tested in Aurora, and proved to be a very fine quality of oil, and burns nicely. The oil has the appearance and odor of that now in use, and the indications are that there is an abundance of it in the earth at that point from whence it comes at Aurora. The caving off of the bank where the oil is obtained was caused by the high water last February, and it may be that that flood will prove a blessing in disguise to Aurora.

THE slow sale with which the buyers are meeting for their tobacco does not deter the farmers in the least, and with a favorable season from this on, there will be an increased acreage planted in this State. All other crops are giving away to tobacco, and some prophecy that the day is coming when the farmers will regret that they allowed it cultivated to such an extent on their land. That may be, but a large quantity of the weed will be produced before the people are willing to let up on it to save the land. Twelve to fifteen dollars per hundred for tobacco will wear out much land yet.

First dam, Lady Ayers, by Redmon's Abdallah Patchen. Second dam Lady Abdallah (dam of Granville, 2:26) by Alexander's Abdallah.

Mambrino Patchen (full brother to Lady Thorn, 2:18¼), by Mambrino Chief; dam by Gano, son of American Eclipse; second dam by son of Sir William, by Sir Archy.

Redmon's Abdallah Patchen, got by Alexander's Abdallah (sire of Goldsmith Maid 2:14), son of Rysdyk's Hambletonian; dam Lady Valentine, by Redmond's Valentine son of Imp. Valentine; 2d dam by Shakspeare; 3d dam by Potomac; 4th dam by Blackburn's Whip, son of Imp. Whip.

Alexander's Abdallah (sire of Goldsmith Maid, 2:14) got by Rysdyk's Hambletonian; dam Katie Darling by Bay Roman.

Mambrino Patchen, sire of Mambrino Abdallah leads all other living horses in number of grandchildren that have beaten 2:30, and the average speed is faster. Mambrino Patchen leads in number and speed having 8 sons and 7 daughters that have produced 16 trotters in 2:30 and under. Wilkes Boy 2 years old, record 2:30¼, is also out of a Mambrino Patchen mare, and Ike Marvel record 2:30¼, is by a son of Mambrino Patchen.

Mambrino Abdallah's colts are nearly all bay. He is good in all points, great substance and stamina, and was the fastest natural trotter at even 12 months old I ever saw, and I priced him then at $5,000, and not a cent less would have bought him at that time. He is a sure and first-class breeder. I have sold a number of his colts at yearlings for $500 each. I sold a filly at 18 months old for $1,000, and a colt coming 3 years old for $1,200, and a four-year-old for $1,500. He is kindly disposed in or out of harness, and one of the most popular horses in the country to-day.

Lady Ayers (the dam of Mambrino Abdallah) is the dam of Tillie Thorn, who can trot better than 2:30. She is also the dam of Thorn Boy, a colt I sold a few days since at the age of 18 months for $1,200. Every colt Lady Ayers has ever produced I have sold for $500, and upwards.

Mambrino Abdallah breeds as fine colts as any horse living, and his colts show extra action, extra size, and always command good prices. Yours Truly, L. HERR.

The undersigned state that we know the horse Mambrino Abdallah, now in control of O. P. Hogan, jun., have examined his colts, and cheerfully recommend this horse to breeders as one of the best in Kentucky. W. W. Adams, Mammoth sale stable, Lexington; J. T. FLORIDA LETTER.

SANFORD, FLA., May 23, 1884.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

'Tis truthfully said that Florida is a land of Flowers and a tropical paradise, and if anyone don't think so, let him come down here from the cold and dreary north where his fingers ache with pain, and his toes stiff with cold, and see Florida in all her grandeur and beauty. When he sees her stately forests, beautiful lakes and her prairies of flowers and orchards, which yield their millions of dollars worth of golden fruit annually, it makes him feel as though he had reached that "land of pure delight, where saints immortal reign."

Belt Air Grove is owned by General Sanford, contains 125 acres, off of which he cleared $22,000 last season, and the grove can not be bought for $500,000. This grove is only 12 years old and just coming into bearing.

Spear Grove is now owned by a Mr. Pace, a gentleman whose acquaintance I have had the pleasure of forming since I came here. This is a very small grove, contains only 5 acres and about 400 trees, and cleared last season $19,227. Mr. Pace has just bought out the last one of the Spear heirs, giving him $10,000 for a two-fifths interest. This grove could not be bought for $50,000. It looks almost incredible that 5 acres could produce such an enormous sum in one season.

Cloveden Grove is situated on the South Florida R. R., 3 miles west of Sanford, and contains 5 acres of trees, 250 or 350 of which are bearing, off of which the former owner, Mr. Benjamin Chree, shipped, last season, to New York and Philadelphia, a large quantity of the choicest varieties of fruit, for which he realized a handsome profit, and has now retired from business and gone to Philadelphia to spend the summer, but will probably return this winter. This grove is now owned by J. F. Smith.

The principal crops here are the orange and Yankee, the latter paying equally as well as the former.

Garden stuff is raised extensively on the low lands, and yields a very handsome profit. Sweet potatoes pay the best. All you have to do to raise them is to take a little one-horse plow and throw two furrows together, then go to some old patch, cut off the old vines in short slips, then drop them the proper distance apart and take a stick and push them down into the ground, (using a long stick so you will not have to bend your back). This is all you have to do to them until they are ready for use. The average yield is from 250 to 300 bushels per acre, and sell readily $1 per bushel.

The climate here is delightful, being just warm enough through the day for anyone to be comfortable, and when the shades of night have gotten around you, the mocking bird and wippoorwill sing you to rest. H. W. SMITH.

ARGENT AND I.

Mr. Anthony Argent has houses and lands,
Dollars in silver and gold;
Half the proceeds of a "ring" on his hands,
Two or three railroads unsold.
Whatever He touches is certain to pay,
I scarcely from debt can keep clear;
He reckons his income by thousands a day,
I mine by some hundreds a year.

He's projecting a water scheme—owning the ponds;
He only keeps dividend stocks;
He has several stacks of United States bonds
In a safe with most intricate locks;
And an office—and a beautiful office, of course—
In the very best part of the street;
He drives down at noon with a 2:40 horse,
I come down at eight on my feet.

A wife, too—a dainty and delicate dame—
Whose diamonds make sunshine seem dim,
And some charming ladies who call, all the same,
Much less often on her than on him.
He takes them to drive in the country at times;
Five hundred then goes very soon,
While I and my wee wife are counting the dimes
To compass an odd afternoon.

But whence is this failure? The story is brief—
At least if the papers speak true;
They have no hesitation to call him a thief,
And the ring that he manages, too.
What matter? He failed once or twice, I am told;
Milked two or three creditors dry;
But he gilded his failures with ill-gotten gold,
And is much more respected than I.

Mr. Anthony Argent may meet any day
Of men like himself half a score;
And I, had I time to go out of my way
Like myself, fifty thousand or more.
The difference is between Argent and me,
As many an instance has told,
That honesty silvered is cold to the eye
Compared to dishonesty's gold.

THAT DREADFUL MAN.

Deacon Smith brought me a letter. It was from my nephew Tom, and read:

Dear Old Aunty:
I've lost every cent of that money. Spec was n.g. What's to become of Hettie and the baby?
Your unlucky
TOM.

I leaned back from my half-eaten supper, shoved my spectacles up on my intellectual forehead, and wrinkled my pug nose with disagreeable thoughts. It seemed as though I had not escaped domestic troubles by refusing twenty years before to marry Hiram Grimwood. Single life had its vexations, too. Tom was my favorite nephew—my dead sister's only child—and from the hour I took him from his sister's arms in petticoats and brought him home to be the joy and torment of my life he had kept me stirred up. Measles and mistakes were the principal themes of his baby days, and love and lawlessness attacked him in turn as he got older. I never drew a free breath till he was safely married to pretty little Hettie Maynard, our minister's daughter, who had all the sense of the family, and the good looks, too. I was most as much in love with her as Tom was, but she had one fault—she didn't see through Tom, and thought his wild-goose chases were sensible, legitimate ways of making money. I always could take care of my money myself. Giving Tom money was like pouring water into a sieve. But Hettie believed that Tom was the greatest business man in the world. She believed everything that boy told her and even, persuaded me into believing in him too.

Now he had done it. I had advanced him $1,000 of the modest inheritance which would be his upon my death, on his sacred assurance that he would double the money and return me the original sum. And he had gone and lost every dollar of it.

"The lame and the lazy are always provided for," I thought bitterly. "Of course Hettie and the baby can't starve. I'll go down to the city and bring them up till he gets something to do, the scamp."

Now I am an old maid and live alone since Tom married, and it didn't take me long to shut the house up. I lent the cat to my next door neighbor, told him she might have him for his keep till I came back, and the bird I took with me for company and safe-keeping. Somehow, as I was getting ready to go, my heart grew light, and before I knew it I was singing an old love-song, though what put it into my head I can't tell. It's twenty years since Hiram Grimwood went to California, and I reckon he's been dead the most of that time, or married, which is about the same.

When I had put on all my things with my back to the glass I turned around and there stood a strange woman. She gave me an awful start.

"Good mornin'," I said; "however did you get in?"

Then I saw it was myself and I laughed and laughed. I had on the same black bombazine dress and bonnet I wore when Tom's mother died, and as that was about fourteen years ago they had come back to fashion and looked quite stylish; and ever since I had the fever my hair has been short and curly, and it hung over my eyes just the way the girls wear it nowadays. I declare I looked so young I didn't know myself. Well! it's a true saying that there are no fools like old fools, and the Lord didn't make no exception of me.

When I got to the station everybody stared at me as if I was a show; I didn't take any baggage cause I warn't going to stay. So I only had a box with a clean calico in it, and a bundle of sweet herbs for the baby, and some new shirts for Tom, and the bird cage, and my umbrella and a clock I wanted to get repaired in the city.

"All aboard!" yelled the conductor.

"I don't see any board," I said politely, and a man gripped me by the arm and pulled me on just as the cars started. Then I heard some one ask: "Who is the innocent old party?" But I didn't see any party, and I guess they got left.

Talk of adventures. I could write a book full of what happened to me on that trip, but it would sound like a romance and nobody would believe it. Ah! friends, truth is stranger than fiction, and I can prove it.

When I got my things settled in the car I felt kind o' homesick and lonesome. There was the old cat left among strangers at one end of the journey, and Tom in distress at the other end, and I kind of swinging between the two, and I thought of the beautiful hymn that says:

"This world is all a floating show."

And—now, don't laugh—I just laid my head down on the back of the seat before me and cried. I wouldn't have let Tom known it for the world, but I did!

There was a man in that seat, but he did not take any notice of me. His face was covered with whiskers and he looked kind of stern, but a real good-looking sort of chap, too. I thought it was him that touched me, and I jumped as if I was shot, but it was the prettiest little blonde girl of sixteen I ever saw.

"Will you please let me sit with you?" she said, and her voice was just like a bird singing, and she had a little white hand all cushiony and dimpled, on my black bombazine arm.

I'm a grumpy old thing myself, and I felt like saying as I heard the rest do: 'this seat's engaged," but when she looked at me with her sweet violet eyes, I just gave in and said:

"Certainly, my dear, sit right down."

I suppose the sweet child saw I was crying, for she kind of snuggled up to me and wanted to see the bird, and praised him, and he chirped to her, and she told me her sad story, how she had come all the way from California and was an orphan going to seek a living in the great untried world.

I came near crying again then, but I remembered where I was and straightened up.

"Did you know a Mr. Grimwood in California?" I asked. Not that I cared to know what had become of Hiram, but I just did it to make talk.

"I—I didn't know many people," she said, in her pretty bird-like voice, "I went to school till my dear mother died and left me alone and penniless!"

She was crying then, and the man in the seat before us turned straight round and stared at her. I gave him a look, I tell you, and he turned away again quicker.

And she had to go at the next station. I never felt so sorry to part with any one, and she actually put her pretty arms about my neck and kissed me, just as if she had known me all her life, sweet thing!

But what does that man do but insist on carrying her satchel out to the platform, and all the time the cars waited he stopped out there talking to her. I couldn't hear what they said, but I saw her give him something and her face was red and she was just as angry as she could be, and as the car moved off I called to her; but she never took any notice, she was that vexed about something! I just made up my mind that he made her pay him for carrying that satchel out, and yet it didn't seem as if any man could be so mean.

After awhile the man came back and sat down in the same seat he had occupied all along, and—would you believe it?—he had the audacity to try and start up a conversation with me.

"Have you the time?" he asked, as impudent as you please.

"Of course I have the time," I answered, in a huff. "I never travel without it."

It was the first time I had been anywhere for ten years, but I didn't propose that he should know it.

"Would you mind telling me what time it is?" he asked, politely.

"Soft soap doesn't go down with me," I looked square at him as I answered:

"Why don't you carry a watch yourself and not trouble ladies?"

He actually smiled. Then I thought maybe he would suspicion that I didn't have any watch, nothing but a gold chain for show, so I took hold of it——

Goodness, gracious! My watch was gone!

I stood right up in the car and screamed at the top of my voice:

"Fire! murder! thieves! I've been robbed! Stop the cars!"

"Hush!" said the man in front of me, in a stern voice. "Matilda Jane, sit down and keep quiet; it won't do any good to scream that way."

I nearly fainted. He called me Matilda Jane, and there never was but one person in the world that always gave me my full name, and that was Hiram Grimwood. I pinched myself to see if I was alive.

"That pretty girl took your watch," he said, and it was his voice this time.

"Never!" I said, indignantly. "You may be Hiram Grimwood or his ghost, and if you are you've no right to come back here and tell lies. That poor child steal, indeed!"

"Matilda Jane, you haven't changed a bit," said that dreadful man. "You're just the same trusting, unsuspicious soul you used to be. That 'poor child' is an adventuress of thirty. She came into the car on purpose to rob you."

"My purse is gone," I gasped, "and every cent I had with me, and a check—Oh, Tom! Tom! There's another fool in the family! I'll just throw myself on the track."

I suppose I must have been temporarily deranged, as they say on juries, for the next thing I knew I was at the door of the car struggling with some one, who held my hands so I couldn't move, and then I broke down and cried, for this was what that dreadful man whispered in my ear:

"Matilda Jane, I have enough for us both, and if you love me as I love you, no knife can cut our love in two."

We had hardly talked matters over, and accounted for each other through all these long years of parting, when we got to the town where Tom lived. We took a carriage; at least Hiram—ahem!—Mr. Grimwood did, and we drove right to the house—a little nest in the outlines and got there just as Tom and Hattie were sitting down to a strawberry short-cake big enough for a dozen. They were laughing and carrying on like two children, and I declare, they were so glad to see me they nearly devoured me off-hand.

"Oh, Tom, Tom," I wailed, "here's your old aunt, who didn't know enough when the Lord rained common sense to hoist her umbrella—Tom, the money's gone."

"Never mind the money," cried Tom. "Money's a fool to this! Give us another hug, old girl! Say, auntie, suppose you introduce your pal?"

That wicked boy! But I had forgotten all about having company.

"It's an old friend," I said, blushing like a goose; "Mr. Grimwood, Tom."

"Oh, Uncle Hiram," said the wretch; "I've heard of you all my life. You're right welcome here," and he pinched my poor arm till the tears came.

I postponed telling about the robbery until we had eaten supper, but I had hardly said the first word, when Hiram took out my watch and purse and laid them in my lap.

"Why, then, Hiram, you—you are the robber!" was the next smart speech I made.

"Not quite, ma'am," said Hiram, and he didn't seem a bit vexed. "I said a few words to that 'sweet child' and she quietly handed me your property. I'd been watching her all the time, and she knew it. Now, Tom, your aunt is not fit to travel alone, is she?"

"Of course she isn't," said that mischievous Tom. "She needs some one to keep her from throwing her money away. By the way, aunty, my little spec has turned out all right. You shall have that money for a wedding settlement if you're good."

"And you'll be married right here with us," said Hattie, giving me Tom's baby to kiss.

"Me first," said Hiram, ducking his head.

"No fools like old fools," said I. "Don't muss my collar, Hiram."

"Bless you, my children," said Tom, but the tears shone in his bright eyes and his voice trembled.

And we were blessed.—Mrs. M. L. Bayne, in Detroit Free Press.

—Apple Sauce: Pare and slice thin as many apples as you wish. Put them into a tin basin or pudding dish, with enough sugar to make them sweet, and a little water. Bake slowly until soft. They will turn a rich red, and have a flavor far exceeding stewed apples.—Boston Globe.

—Cabbage escallopped is a new dish much esteemed as an entree. Cook with layers of bread crumbs and layers of chopped cabbage, with pepper, salt and butter, with milk or cream to moisten it. It should be well baked and browned nicely on the top.—Toledo Blade.

—Old newspaper is an excellent thing to keep a stove clean. Whenever anything is by accident spilled over upon the stove, instead of trying to clean it with a cloth or brush, take a bit of paper and remove it quickly, and use a little more paper to rub the stove bright, and then burn them. It is a much quicker, neater and more convenient way.

—An Eastern farmer says to destroy quack grass he plows the land, just before the planting of any crop, nine inches deep, which puts all the quack roots four inches underground, then spreads plenty of manure, harrows thoroughly with one of the efficient new harrows, making the surface as mellow as possible for the new seed bed. The crop is cultivated very thoroughly till it completely shades the ground. Cabbage or corn fodder answers well. The roots plowed under, having no breathing, will rot and enrich the soil.

—Almost every woman who has kept house for several years has stair carpet that is badly worn; in many cases it is worn out with the exception of the border. This may be used with good effect. After it is carefully cleaned, cut the border off, leaving a margin of the worn center part for a seam, then use this for the border of mats made of pieces of carpet. A large mat which will do good service and will look well, too, can be made by sewing two breadths together and then putting the border on. Dampen the seam and press it on the wrong side with a hot iron.—Albany Journal.

Soiling Pigs in Summer.

As the pig is a grass eating animal, this taste for grass or roots should always be gratified. Many farmers have no pig pasture, and keep their pigs in a pen, or pen and small yard. They seem quite to forget the nature of the pig, and treat him as if he were only fitted to digest grain or other concentrated food. This may be responsible for many of his ailments.

It is easy for the farmer to furnish clover or other green food to his pigs in summer. This animal is not very particular; there are many weeds in the garden that he will take and return his thanks with a polite grunt. He appreciates all such attentions shown him, and will testify it by better health and growth. This is a matter of much importance, as a bushel of corn fed with clover will often produce as much growth as a bushel and a half fed alone. Animals grow best when they are in good health and have a vigorous appetite, and the clover or other green food keeps their digestion good. That great pest, the Canada thistle, when the stalk is green and succulent, is eaten with a genuine relish by pigs. In this condition this thistle is preferred to grass by many other animals on the farms.

When the clover is large, the pigs will eat it better if it is run through a cutter. This mixes stalks and leaves so as to render it more succulent. The pig will eat more clover or grass than is generally supposed. Shoats of fifty to eighty pounds will eat from six to eight pounds of green clover per day. We have found the best way to feed it was to run the clover through a cutter and mix with meal. In this way, the clover and meal was eaten together, and this mixing of the bulky and concentrated foods results in a more perfect digestion of the corn meal or other ground food. We tried so accurate an experiment on this, that the result is not left to conjecture. We divided a litter of six pigs, and to three fed clover and corn-meal, and to the other three fed corn-meal alone, soaked in cold water. The latter, every two or three weeks, would be dainty in eating and appear to be feverish, but after fasting, and taking only water for a day or two, would eat again for some weeks, when the same fasting period would be repeated. But the other three, fed on meal and clover always had a good appetite and made a steady and rapid progress. Each lot ate the same amount of corn meal, but those fed clover dressed nearly thirty per cent. the most.

We have become thoroughly convinced of the importance of giving the pig green food in summer and some coarse food, such as roots, pumpkins or short cut clover hay, boiled or softened in warm water in winter. It does not require much time to bring to a lot of pigs clover or other green food, in yard or pen, during the summer. It only requires 100 lbs. for a dozen pigs. We think farmers are generally well convinced of the benefits of a good pasture for pigs, and soiling will take the place of the pasture when the farmer has none.—Live Stock Journal.

CURE OF FEVER AND AGUE.

HACKENSACK, N. J., February 25th, 1884.

I have been troubled with Fever and Ague for upwards of two years. I have taken about three pounds of quinine, I think, but I could not shake off the shakes. One day, finding myself very constipated, I took six BRANDRETH'S PILLS on going to bed. They acted very fully. To my surprise I did not have any chills the next day; so I took six more Pills the next night. On the following morning I found myself much stronger and with considerable appetite, and no Ague. I continued taking the Pills for ten days, when I found myself entirely well, and have remained so ever since.

C. VREELAND.

POTSDAM, ST. LAWRENCE CO., N. Y., February 5, 1884.

Some two months ago I was afflicted with inflammation of the eyes. I was confined to the house and compelled to stay in a dark room. Being so confined I was attacked with Fever and Ague. My physician dosed me with quinine until my hearing was affected and still every seven days another attack would come on. Meanwhile, I was afraid I would lose my eyesight. In this awful condition, my mother advised me to take eleven BRANDRETH'S PILLS at night. They acted very powerfully, and then I felt weak, but I was much better. I passed four very bilious stools. The next night I took four more Pills. These acted but twice. My eyes were very much better. I continued taking three every night for a week, when I returned to work entirely well. My eyes required a shade for about a month. I had no more Fever and Ague.

PRESIDENTIAL FAVORITES.

Some Interesting Facts Concerning the Men Who Stand Closest to the Chief Executive.

Visitors who, from curiosity or business, have called at the White House, must have been impressed by the courteous yet systematic manner with which they were received and escorted through the mansion. The gentlemen whose duty it is to receive all persons coming to the White House are Colonel E. S. Densmore, Mr. John T. Rickard and Mr. T. F. Pendel, and they have occupied their present positions through the various administrations since and even during the war. Mr. Pendel was President Lincoln's body-guard; saw him to his carriage the fatal night on which he visited Ford's theater, and he now has in his possession the blood-stained coat which Mr. Lincoln wore on that memorable occasion. There is not a public man in America to-day who does not know, and who is not known by, these gentlemen, and the reminiscences of public and social life which they can recount would fill a congressional volume. During the weary yet exciting years of the war; through the more peaceful times of Grant's administration; while Hayes held the reins of government, and when Garfield was shot, it was these men who stood in the Executive mansion, welcoming the advent of each new administration, bowing at its departure, and receiving both martyrs through its portals.

During that long, hot and never to be forgotten summer when President Garfield lay between "two worlds," the Nation became aware of the deadly malarial influence which hung about the White House. But all through that period these three men never deserted their posts for a single day, although each one was suffering intensely. In conversation with the writer, Colonel Densmore said:

"It is impossible to describe the tortures I have undergone. To be compelled to smile and treat the thousands of visitors who come here daily with courtesy when one is in the greatest agony requires a tremendous effort. All that summer I had terrible headaches, heart-burn and a stifling sensation that sometimes took away my breath. My appetite was uncertain and I felt severe pains in the small of my back. I was under the doctor's care with strict instructions not to go out of the house, but I remained on duty nevertheless. You would be surprised to know the amount of quinine I took; on some days it was as much as sixteen grains."

"And was Mr. Rickard badly off, too?"

"I should think he was. Why, time and again we have picked him up and laid him on the mantel, here in the vestibule, he was so used up."

"Yes," exclaimed Mr. Rickard, "I was so weak I could not rise after lying down without help, and could only walk with the aid of two canes, and then in a stooping position. Oh, we have been in a pretty bad condition here, all of us."

"And yet you are all the embodiment of health," said the writer, as he looked at the three bright and vigorous men before him.

"Oh, yes," said Mr. Rickard, "we have not known what sickness was for more than a year."

"Have you some secret way of overcoming malaria and its attendant horrors?"

"I think we have a most certain way," replied Colonel Densmore, "but it is no secret. You see, about two years ago my wife began to grow blind, and I was alarmed at her condition. She finally became so she could not tell whether a person were white or black at a distance of ten feet. One of her lady friends advised her to try a certain treatment that had done wonders for her, and to make a long story short, she did so and was completely cured. This induced me to try the same means for my own restoration and as soon as I found it was doing me good I recommended it to my associates and we have all been cured right here in the stronghold of malaria and kept in perfect health ever since by means of Warner's Safe Cure. Now I am not a believer in medicines in general, but I do not hesitate to say that I am satisfied I should have died of Bright's disease of the kidneys before this had it not been for this wonderful remedy. Indeed, I use it as a household medicine and give it to my children whenever they have any ailments."

"Yes," exclaimed Mr. Pendel, "I use it in my family all the while and have found it the most efficient remedy we have ever employed. I know of very many public men who are using it to-day, and they all speak well of it."

"I weigh 160 pounds to-day," said Mr. Rickard, "and when my physicians told me over a year ago I could not hope to recover I weighed 122 pounds. Under such influences you can not wonder that I consider this the best medicine before the American people."

The above statements from these gentlemen need no comments. They are voluntary and outspoken expressions from sources which are the highest in the land. Were there the slightest question regarding their authenticity they would not be made public, but as they furnish such valuable truths for all who are suffering, we unhesitatingly publish them for the good of all.

MODERN SURGERY.

Amputation Within Three Inches of the Hip Joint!—Recovery Due to the Use of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, (Rondout, N. Y.)

Money is the universal necessity, and none but a cynic or a fool will affect to despise it. Mr. Abram Ellsworth, of Port Ewen, Ulster County, N. Y., had realized this truth. His disease involved the whole of his thigh bone, and the suffering man looked forward, not without apparent reason, to death as his only deliverer. His family physician refused to amputate the limb—asserting that the operation would kill the patient on the spot. Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who was consulted, held a different opinion and amputated the limb. The Doctor then administered freely his great Blood medicine, FAVORITE REMEDY, to afford tone and strength to the system, to prevent the return of the disease, and Mr. Ellsworth remains to this day in the bloom of health. This gentleman's disease was the offspring of foul blood, and Dr. David Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY purified the blood and restored to him the power once more to enjoy his life. Are you suffering from any disease traceable to the same cause? Try FAVORITE REMEDY. Your druggist has it. One dollar a bottle. Bear in mind the proprietor's name and address: Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, New York.

POISON

In the blood is apt to show itself in the Spring, and nature should by all means be assisted in throwing it off. Swift's Specific does this effectively. It is a purely vegetable, non-poisonous remedy, which helps nature to force all the poison or taint out through the pores of the skin.

Mr. Robert A. Easley, of Dickson, Tenn., writes, under date March 18, 1881: "I had chills and fever, followed by rheumatism, for three years, so that I was not able to attend to my business; had tried almost every kind of medicine, and found no relief. A friend recommended Swift's Specific. I tried one bottle and my health began to improve. I continued until I had taken six bottles, and it has set me on my feet, as sound and well as ever. I recommended it to all similarly afflicted."

BLAINE!

Nominated On the Fourth Ballot

By the Republican Convention at Chicago.

John A. Logan Placed Second on the Ticket Without Practical Opposition.

Full Proceedings of the Convention—The Republican Platform—Nominating Speeches—Names of the Members of the National Committee, Etc.

JAMES G. BLAINE, of Maine.

Contest Over the Temporary Chairmanship—Powell Clayton, of Arkansas, Selected by the Committee, and John R. Lynch, of Mississippi, Elected by the Convention on a Call by States.

CHICAGO, June 3.—The Republican Presidential Convention was called to order at 12 o'clock, in Exposition Hall, by Senator Sabin, Chairman of the National Republican Committee, who delivered a neat and appropriate address.

In conclusion, at the request of the National Republican Convention, Mr. Sabin proposed as temporary Chairman of the Convention, the Hon. Powell Clayton, of Arkansas. [Loud applause.] Mr. Lodge, of Massachusetts, moved to substitute the name of Hon. John R. Lynch, of Mississippi, and asked that when the vote was taken the roll be called on that question.

The vote stood, Lynch 431, Clayton 387. The election was made unanimous.

Mr. Lynch, on taking the chair, delivered a pithy address.

The Committee on permanent Organization were in session till a late hour this evening. After electing George B. Williams, of Indiana, Chairman, the committee proceeded to the election of the permanent Chairman and Secretary of the convention. The Hon. Galusha A. Grow, of Pennsylvania, was put in nomination by the friends of Blaine, and J. B. Henderson, of Missouri, by the opposition. Henderson was elected by a vote of 20 to 17. Chas. W. Clisbee of Michigan, was unanimously elected Secretary.

CHICAGO, June 4.—The convention was called to order at 11:18 a. m., by Chairman Lynch. The convention was opened by prayer by Rev. John H. Barrows, of this city. A memorial was presented from the Maryland State Temperance Alliance.

Mr. Williams, of Indiana—I am directed by the committee on permanent organization to report as the Permanent Chairman of this Convention General John B. Henderson, of Missouri. [Applause.] The Chair appointed Hon. G. A. Grow, George F. Hoar and G. B. Williams to escort Mr. Henderson to the Chair.

When Mr. Henderson reached the platform he pinned a beautiful badge on his coat as a sign of his office as Permanent Chairman of the Convention, after which, and as soon as he could be heard, he spoke as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: We have assembled to survey the past history of the party, to rejoice as we may, because of the good it has done in the military and civil conflicts of the last twenty-four years. Out of these conflicts has come a race of heroes and statesmen, challenging confidence and love at home, respect and admiration abroad. And now, when we come to select a standard bearer for the approaching conflict, our chief embarrassment is not in the want, but in the abundance of presidential material. New York has her true and tried statesman, upon whose administration the fierce, even unfriendly light of public scrutiny has been turned, and the universal verdict is, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." Vermont has her great statesman, whose mind is as clear as the crystal springs of his native State, and whose virtue is as firm as its granite hills. Ohio can come with a name whose history is the history of the Republican party itself. Illinois can come with one who never failed in the discharge of public duty, whether in council chamber or on the field of battle. Maine has an honored favorite whose splendid abilities and personal qualities have endeared him to the hearts of his friends, and the brilliancy of whose genius challenges the admiration of all. Connecticut and Indiana may come with names scarcely less illustrious than these, and now, in conclusion, if because of personal disagreements or the emergencies of the occasion another name is sought, there remains that grand old hero of Kenesaw Mountain and Atlanta. When patriotism calls he can not, if he would, be silent, but, grasping that banner to him so dear, which he has already borne in triumph, he will march to civil victory no less renowned than those of war. I thank you, gentlemen, for this distinguished mark of your confidence.

The Chair—The question now is the regular adjournment until 7 o'clock this evening. All in favor will say "Aye," those opposed, "No."

The motion was carried, and the convention adjourned until 7 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.—Chairman Henderson called the convention to order at thirty-five minutes past seven o'clock this evening, and made the following announcement: "Gentlemen, there is a communication in the hands of the Secretary from the Committee on Credentials, which will be read to the convention."

The Secretary read the communication, which stated that, as important business was occupying the time of the committee, it would not be able to report to the convention this evening.

Mr. Clark, of Illinois, offered a resolution to issue five hundred tickets of admission for veteran soldiers.

After a long debate upon the resolution it was defeated.

Mr. Long, of Massachusetts, moved that the convention adjourn until ten o'clock to-morrow morning. He accepted an amendment making the hour eleven o'clock.

CHICAGO, June 5.—The Convention was called to order at 10:30 a. m. The galleries and rear of the hall are packed to suffocation, while thousands are on the outside clamoring vainly for admission. Among these are Dezendorf and his colleagues. They have learned that Mahone and his followers are to be seated, but they declare that they must and shall be heard on the floor, even if they have to force their way through the guards.

The report of the Committee on Credentials was read by Mr. Fort of New Jersey. It was to the effect that the sitting members in all the contested cases are entitled to their seats, except in the case of the Nineteenth District of New York and the Fifth District of Kentucky, while both delegates and contestants are admitted to cast a vote each. In the Virginia case the Committee found unanimously that the delegation headed by Senator Mahone was entitled to the seats. The report was adopted without discussion.

Parks, of California, from the Committee on Rules, reported that the Committee had adopted substantially the rules of the last Convention, except that it recommended the adoption of Cushing's Manual as the parliamentary law of the body, instead of the rules of the House of Representatives, except that the previous question is to be in force as in the House.

Grow, of Pennsylvania, from the minority of the Committee, offered a substitute for the tenth rule, which prescribes the mode of electing delegates to the next National Republican Convention. He proposes that delegates shall be elected in the same manner as members of Congress.

Parks accepted the proposed amendment, Grow having explained that the delegates at large are to be elected by State Conventions, and that the manner of electing delegates from the District of Columbia be prescribed by the National Republican Committee. The rules were then adopted.

The Committee on Resolutions reported the following platform, which was unanimously adopted without debate:

THE PLATFORM.

The Republicans of the United States in National Convention assembled, renewed their allegiance to the principles upon which they have triumphed in six successive Presidential elections, and congratulate the American people on the attainment of so many results in legislation and administration by which the Republican party has, after saving the Union, done so much to render its institutions just, equal and beneficial, the safeguard of liberty and the embodiment of the best thought and highest purposes of our citizens.

The Republican party has gained its strength by quick and faithful response to the demands of the people for the freedom and the equality of all men, for a united Nation, assuring the rights of all citizens, for the elevation of labor, for an honest currency, for purity in legislation, and for integrity and accountability in all departments of the Government, and it accepts anew the duty of leading in the work of progress and reform. We lament the death of President Garfield, whose sound statesmanship, long conspicuous in Congress, gave promise of a strong and successful administration, a promise fully realized during the short period of his office as President of the United States. His distinguished success in war and peace have endeared him to the hearts of the American people.

In the administration of President Arthur we recognize a wise, conservative and patriotic policy, under which the country has been blessed with remarkable prosperity, and we believe his eminent services are entitled to and will receive the hearty approval of every citizen.

It is the first duty of a good Government to protect the rights and promote the interests of its own people. The largest diversity of industry is the most productive of general prosperity and the comfort and independence of the people. We therefore demand that the imposition of duties on foreign imports shall be made not "for revenue only," but that in raising the requisite revenues for the Government, such duties shall be so levied as to afford security to our diversified industries and protection to the rights and wages of the laborer, to the end that active and intelligent labor as well as capital, may have its just award and the laboring man his full share in the national prosperity.

Against the so-called economic system of the Democratic party, which would degrade our labor to the foreign standard, we enter our earnest protest. The Democratic party has failed completely to relieve the people of the burden of unnecessary taxation by a wise reduction of the surplus.

The Republican party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff, and to reduce the surplus, not by the vicious and indiscriminate process of horizontal reduction, but by such methods as will relieve the tax-payer without injuring the labor or the great productive interests of the country.

We recognize the importance of sheep husbandry in the United States, the serious depression which it is now experiencing and the danger threatening the future prosperity, and we therefore respect the demands of the representatives of this important agricultural interest for a readjustment of duty upon foreign wool, in order that such industry shall have full and adequate protection.

We have always recommended the best money known to the civilized world, and we urge that efforts should be made to unite all commercial nations in the establishment of an international standard which shall fix for all the relative value of gold and silver coinage.

Reform of the Civil Service auspiciously begun under a Republican Administration, should be completed by the further extension of the reformed system already established by law to all the grades of the service to which it is applicable. The spirit and purpose of the reform should be observed in all Executive appointments, and all laws at variance with the objects of existing reformed legislation should be repealed, to the end that the dangers to free institutions which lurk in the power of official patronage may be wisely and effectively avoided.

The public lands are a heritage of the people of the United States and should be reserved, as far as possible, for small holdings by actual settlers. We are opposed to the acquisition of large tracts of land by corporations or individuals, especially where such holding are in the hands of non-resident aliens, and we will endeavor to obtain such legislation as will tend to correct this evil. We demand of Congress the speedy forfeiture of all land grants which have lapsed by reason of non-compliance with acts of incorporation in all cases where there has been no attempt in good faith to perform the condition of such grants. The grateful thanks of the American people are due to the Union soldiers and sailors of the late war, and the Republican party stands pledged to suitable pensions for all who were disabled, for the widows and orphans of those who died in the war. The Republican party also pledges the repeal of the limitation contained in the Arrears Act of 1879, so that all invalid soldiers shall share alike, and their pensions begin with the date of disability, or discharge, and not with the date of application.

The Republican party favors a policy which shall keep us from entangling alliances with foreign nations, and which gives us the right to expect that foreign nations shall refrain from meddling in American affairs. The policy which seeks peace can trade with all powers, especially with those of the Western Hemisphere.

We demand the restoration of our navy to its old-time strength and efficiency, that it may on any sea protect the rights of American citizens and the interests of American commerce; and we call upon Congress to remove the burdens under which American shipping has been depressed, so that it may again be true that we have a commerce which leaves no sea unexplored and a navy which takes no law from a superior force.

Resolved, That appointments by the President to offices in the Territories should be made from the bona fide citizens and residents of the Territories wherein they are to serve.

Resolved, That it is the duty of Congress to enact such laws as shall promptly and effectually suppress the system of polygamy within our territory, and divorce the political from the ecclesiastical power of the so-called Mormon Church, and that the law so enacted should be rightly enforced by the civil authorities if possible, and by the military if need be. The people of the United States in their organized capacity constitute a Nation and not a mere confederacy of States. The National Government is supreme within the sphere of its National duty, but the States have reserved rights which should be faithfully maintained; each should be guarded with jealous care, so that the harmony of our system of government may be preserved and the Union kept inviolate. The perpetuity of our institutions rests upon the maintenance of a free ballot, honest count and correct returns.

We denounce the fraud and violence practiced by the Democracy in the Southern States, by which the will of the voter is defeated, as dangerous to the preservation of free institutions, and we solemnly arraign the Democratic party as being the guilty recipient of the fruits of such fraud and violence.

We extend to the Republicans of the South, regardless of their former party affiliations, our cordial sympathy, and pledge to them our most earnest efforts to promote the passage of such legislation as will secure to every citizen of whatever race and color the full and complete recognition, possession and exercise of all civil and political rights.

The regulation of commerce with foreign nations and between the States is one of the most important prerogatives of the general Government, and the Republican party distinctly announces its purpose to support such legislation as will fully and efficiently carry out the constitutional power of Congress over inter-State commerce. The principle regulation of railway corporations is a wise and salutary one for the protection of all classes of people, and we favor legislation that shall prevent unjust discrimination and excessive charges for transportation, and that shall secure to the people and railways alike the fair and unequal protection of the laws.

We favor the establishment of a National Bureau of Labor, the enforcement of the Eight Hour Law, a wise and judicious system of general education by adequate appropriation from the National revenues wherever the same is needed. We believe that everywhere the protection to a citizen of American birth must be secured to citizens of American adoption, and we favor the settlement of National differences by International arbitration.

The Republican party, having its birth in a hatred of slave labor, and a desire that all men may be truly free and equal, is unalterably opposed to placing our workingmen in competition with any form of servile labor, whether at home or abroad.

In this spirit we denounce the importation of contract labor, whether from Europe or Asia, as an offense against the spirit of American institutions, and we pledge ourselves to sustain the present law restricting Chinese immigration, and to provide such other legislation as is necessary to carry out its purpose.

The convention adjourned until 7 o'clock this evening.

CHICAGO, June 5.—Chairman Henderson called the convention and the vast audience to order at 7:35 p. m., and said: "Gentlemen of the Convention, under the rules adopted, the order of business now is the presentation of candidates for President."

A motion was passed directing the Committee on Seats to issue five hundred tickets of admission to veteran soldiers and sailors, to be distributed through the chairmen of the several State delegations.

The Secretary then proceeded to call the roll of States, calling Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado and Connecticut, and when the name of the latter State was called, Mr. Brandigee, of Connecticut, arose and took the stand, amid loud applause. In a neat speech he nominated General Joseph R. Hawley.

The Secretary then call the States of Delaware, Florida and Georgia without meeting with any response. When Illinois was called, Senator Cullom presented the name of General John A. Logan, in the following speech:

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION—Twenty-four years ago the second National Convention of the Republican party met in this city and nominated their first successful candidate for President of the United States, Abraham Lincoln. [Cheers.] Abraham Lincoln led the Republican party to its first great victory. He stands to-day in the estimation of the world as the grandest figure, the most majestic figure of all modern times. [Applause.] Again, in 1868, another Republican Convention came together in this city, and nominated as its candidate for President of the United States, another eminent citizen of Illinois, General Ulysses S. Grant [Loud Cheers], and the Republican party was again victorious. Still again, in 1880, the Republican party turned its face towards this political Mecca, where two successes had been organized, and the murdered Garfield led the Republican party to victory. [Loud and continued applause.]

Mr. President and fellow citizens: It is good for us to be here. There are omens of victory in the air. History repeats itself. There are promises of triumph to the Republican party in holding its convention in this emporium of the Northwest. [Applause.] The Commonwealth of Illinois which has never wavered in its adherence to Republican principles since it gave to the Nation and to the world the illustrious Lincoln, now presents to this convention for its consideration as the standard-bearer of the Republican party, another son of Illinois, one whose name will be recognized from one end of this land to the other as an able statesman, a brilliant soldier, and an honest man—General John A. Logan. A native of the State which he represents in the council of the Nation, reared among the youth of a section where every element of manhood is early brought into play, he is eminently a man of the people. [Applause.]

The safety, the permanency and the prosperity of the Nation depend upon the courage and integrity and the loyalty of its citizens. When yonder storied flag was assailed by enemies in arms, when the integrity of the Union was imperiled by an organized treason, when the storm of war threatened the very life of this Nation, this gallant son of the Prairie State resigned his seat in the Congress of the United States; returned to his home, and was among the first of our citizens to raise a regiment and to march to the front in defense of his country. [Applause.] Like Douglass, he believed that in time of war men must be either patriots or traitors, and he threw his mighty influence on the side of the Union, and Illinois made a record second to none in the history of States in the struggle to preserve this Government. [Applause.] His history is the record of the battles of Belmont, Donelson, of Shiloh, of Vicksburg, of Lookout Mountain, of Atlanta, and of the famous march to the sea. [Great applause.] He never lost a battle. [Applause.] I repeat again, Mr. Chairman and fellow-citizens, [applause], he never lost a battle in all the war. [Applause.] When there was fighting to be done, he did not wait for others, nor did he fail to obey orders when they were received. His plume, the white plume of Henry of Navarre, was always to be seen at the point where the battle raged the hottest. [Applause.] During the long struggle of four years he commanded, under the authority of the Government, first a regiment, then a brigade, then a division, then an army corps, and finally an army. He remained in the service until the war closed, when, at the head of his army, with the scars of battle upon him, he marched into the Capital of the Nation, and with the brave men for whom he had bled on a hundred hard-fought fields was mustered out of the service under the very shadow of the Capital building which he had left four years before, as a member of Congress, to go and fight the battles of his country.

When the war was over and general peace victoriously returned, he was again honored by his fellow-citizens to take his place in the councils of the nation. In a service of twenty years in both Houses of Congress he has shown himself to be no less able and distinguished a citizen than he was renowned as a soldier.

Conservative in the advocacy of measures involving the public welfare, ready and eloquent in debate, fearless—yes, I repeat again, fearless in defense of the rights of the weak against the oppressions of the strong, he stands to-day (and I say it without disposition to take one laurel from the brow of these men whose names may be presented to this convention;—I say he stands to-day in my judgment, closer to the great mass of the people of this country than almost any other man now engaging public attention. [Applause]. No man has done more in defense of those principles which have given life and spirit and victory to the Republican party than has John A. Logan, of Illinois. [Applause.] In all that goes to make up a brilliant military and civil career, and to commend a man to the favor of the people, he whose name we have presented here to-night has shown himself to be the peer of the best. We ask you, therefore, to give him this nomination, because it would not be assailed and it is not assailable. We ask you to nominate him, because his public record is so clean that even political calumny dare not attack it. We ask you to nominate him in behalf of the hundreds of thousands of gray veteran volunteer soldiers who are to-night over this broad land standing around the telegraph offices waiting to know whether that gallant leader of the volunteer soldiers of this country is to receive the nomination at your hands. [Applause.] We ask you to nominate him in behalf of the white and the colored Republicans of the South who are here by the hundred, appealing to this convention as the representative of our grand old party, to give protection, and to vindicate them in their rights in the South. [Applause.]

Now, my friends, standing in the midst of this vast assemblage of representative citizens of this grand Republic—aye, in the sublime presence of the people, themselves, represented here to-night in all their majesty, we offer you the name of the tried hero and patriot, the sagacious and incorruptible statesman, the man who, though defeated, never skulked in his tent—we offer you John A. Logan, and ask you to make him your nominee. [Applause.] If you do so he will give you a glorious victory in November next, and when he shall have taken his position as President of this great Republic you may be sure you will have an administration in the interest of commerce, in the interest of finance, and in the interest of peace at home and peace abroad, and in the interest of the prosperity of this great people. [Applause.]

The nomination of General Logan was seconded by M. Prentiss, of Missouri.

The call was then proceded with. Indiana, Iowa, Kansas Kentucky and Louisiana, each being called, and each passing as called. When Maine was reached Judge West, of Ohio, was introduced. The sensation was intense, and the interest in Mr. West, on account of his commanding presence, and sympathy for his infirmity, brought all to silence in the vast hall. Judge West nominated James G. Blaine, of Maine, with the following speech:

As a delegate in the Chicago Convention in 1860 the proudest service of my life was performed by voting for the nomination of that inspired emancipator, the first, Republican President of the United States. [Applause.] Four-and-twenty years of the grandest history of recorded time has distinguished the ascendency of the Republican party. The skies have lowered and reverses have threatened. Our flag is still there waving above the mansion of the Presidency, not a stain on its folds, not a cloud on its glory. Whether it shall maintain that grand ascendancy depends upon the action of this great council. With bated breath the Nation awaits the result. On it are fixed the eyes of twenty millions of Republican free men in the North. On it, or to it, rather, are stretched forth the imploring hands of ten million political bondmen of the South. [Applause.] While above, from the portals of light, is looking down the immortal spirit of the immortal martyr who first bore it to victory, bidding to us hail and God-speed. [Applause.] Six times in six campaigns has that banner triumphed that symbol of union, freedom, humanity and progress. Sometimes by that silent man of destiny, the Wellington of the American army. [Wild applause.] Last by him and whose untimely taking off a nation swelled the funeral cries, and wept above great Garfield's grave. [Cheers and applause.] The subordinate issues resulting therefrom are settled and buried away with the dead issues of the past. The arms of the solid South are against us. Not an electoral gun can be expected from that section. If triumph comes, the Republican States of the North must furnish the conquering battalions—from the farm, the anvil, the loom; from the mine, the workshop and the desk; from the hut of the trapper on the snowy Sierras, from the hut of the fisherman on the banks of the Hudson. The Republican States must furnish these conquering battalions if triumph comes. Does not sound political wisdom, dictate and demand that a leader shall be given to them to whom our people will follow, not as conscripts advancing by funeral marches to certain defeat, but a grand civic hero whom the souls of the people desire, and whom they will follow with all the enthusiasm of volunteers as they sweep on and onward to certain victory? [Cheers.]

Shall that banner triumph again? Commit it to the bearing of that chief, [a voice, "James G. Blaine, of Maine." Cheers,]—commit it to the bearing of that chief, the inspiration of whose illustrious character and great name will fire the hearts of our young men, stir the blood of our manhood and rekindle the fervor of the veteran, and the closing of the seventh campaign will see that holy ensign spanning the sky like a bow of promise. [Cheers.] Political conditions are changed since the accession of the Republican party to power. The mighty issues of struggling freedom and bleeding humanity which convulsed the continent and aroused the Republic, rallied, united and inspired the forces of patriotism and the forces of humanity in one consolidated phalanx. These great issues have ceased their contentions.

In this contention of forces to whose candidate shall be intrusted our battle-flag? Citizens, I am not here, and may my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth if I abate one tithe from the just fame, integrity and public honor of Chester A. Arthur, our President. [Applause.] I abate not one tithe from the just fame and public integrity of George F. Edmunds [applause]; of Joseph R. Hawley [applause]; of John Sherman [applause]; of that grand old black eagle of Illinois [here the speaker was interrupted several moments by prolonged applause], and I am proud to know that these distinguished Senators whom I have named have borne like testimony to the public life, the public character and the public integrity of him whose confirmation brought him to the highest office—second to dignity to the office of the President only himself—the first premiership in the administration of James A. Garfield. [Applause.] A man for whom Senators and rivals will vote for Secretary of State and the United States, is good enough for a plain flesh-and-blood God's people to vote for the President. [Loud applause.] Who shall be our candidate? Not the representative of a particular interest or a particular class. Send the great proclamation to the country labeled, The doctors' candidate, the lawyers' candidate, the Wall street candidate, and the hand of resurrection would not fathom his November grave. [Applause.] Gentlemen, he must be a representative of American manhood [applause]; a representative of that living Republicanism that demands the amplest industrial protection and opportunity whereby labor shall be enabled to earn and eat the bread of independent employment, relieved of mendicant competition with pauper Europe or pagan China. [Loud applause.] He must be a representative of that Republicanism that demands the absolute political as well as personal emancipation and enfranchisement of mankind. A representative of the Republicanism which recognizes the stamp of American citizenship as the passport to every right, privilege and consideration at home or abroad, whether under the sky of Bismarck, under the Palmetto, under the Pelican or the banks of the Mohawk—that Republicanism that regards with dissatisfaction a despotism which, under the sic semper tyrannis of the whole dominion, emulates by slaughter popular majorities in the name of Democracy; a Republicanism as embodied and stated in the platform of principles this day adopted by your convention. Gentlemen, such a representative Republican is James G. Blaine, of Maine.

Upon the mention of the name of Blaine there arose another shout of applause, which, spreading rapidly, soon developed into a greater, louder and more piercing halloo than followed the call of Maine. The handkerchiefs of the ladies were again waved in unison. The delegates elevated their hats, and it seemed likely, for five minutes, to be merely a repetition of the preceding uproar.

It has been averred that in making this nomination every other consideration should merge, every other interest be sacrificed in order and with a view exclusively to secure the Republican vote and carrying the State of New York. [Slight applause from the back seats.] Gentlemen, party demands of this convention a nominee whose inspiration and glorious prestige shall carry the Presidency with or without the State of New York. [Applause.] That will carry the Legislatures of the several States, and avert the sacrifice of the United States Senate; that shall sweep into the tide the Congressional districts, to recover the House of Representatives, and restore it to the Republican party. Three millions of Republicans believe that that man, who, from the baptism of blood on the plains of Kansas to the fall of the immortal Garfield, in all that struggle of humanity and progress wherever humanity desires succor. Where love for freedom called for protection; wherever the country called for a defender, wherever blows fell thickest and fastest, there in the forefront of the battle was found to wave the white plume of James A. Garfield, our Henry of Navarre. [The speaker seeing that he had mispoken, closed his sentence by substituting the name of James G. Blaine] our Henry of Navarre. Nominate him, and the shouts of September victory in Maine will be re-echoed back by the thunders of the October victory in Ohio. Nominate him, and the camp-fire and beacon lights will illuminate the continent from the Golden Gate to Cleopatra's Needle. Nominate him and the millions who are now in waiting will rally to swell the column of victory that is sweeping on. In the name of a majority of the delegates from the Republican States, and of our glorious constituencies who must fight this battle, I nominate James G. Blaine, of Maine. [Renewed applause.]

C. K. Davis, of Minnesota, seconded the nomination of Mr. Blaine.

When the State of New York was reached and called by the Secretary of the convention, Mr. Martin I. Townsend, of New York, took his place upon the platform. The house cheered and applauded for sixteen minutes, and endeavored, if possible, to counteract the enthusiasm gotten up by the friends of Mr. Blaine a few minutes previous. Mr. Townsend made an appropriate address.

H. H. Bingham, of Pennsylvania, seconded the nomination of President Arthur.

When Ohio was reached Judge J. B. Foraker, of Ohio, nominated Hon. John Sherman, of Ohio, in the following speech:

MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION—If the noise and demonstration and nominating and seconding speeches, when numerically considered, could either nominate a candidate or elect him to be a President of the United States, I would not, in view of what has transpired in this hall to-night, take this stand to perform the duty that has been imposed upon me. But in view of the fact that such results do not necessarily follow such demonstration, but more particularly in view of the fact that these demonstrations are conflicting and these orators opposing, I am emboldened to come before you that I may in an humble way say a few plain words for a very plain, but a very great and grand man. [Loud applause.] But, sir, first and foremost, I want to say again here and now, what I have had occasion to repeat so many times since I came to Chicago to attend this convention, and that is that Ohio is a Republican State. [Applause.] She will cast her Electoral vote for the nominee of this convention. [Cries of "Good, good," and applause.] But, sirs, she claims no credit, and she asks no favor on that account. She did otherwise. She could not do less without injustice to the memory and teachings of a long line of distinguished sons who have won imperishable renown for themselves and their country, both on the field and in the cabinet. I am not here, therefore, to ask anything for her nor in her name as a condition of precedent. On the contrary, let it be distinctly understood that whatever she may do in other years—and I happen to know that she sometimes acts strangely, [laughter and applause,] she never failed to carry our flag to victory in Presidential campaigns. She has always been ready to enthusiastically follow the chosen leader of the party, and she was never more so than at the present time. To-day, as in the past, her highest ambition is that with her October election she may worthily and victoriously lead the Republican column. [Loud applause.] If, therefore, it be true that in the past she has enjoyed distinguish favor, she humbly hopes it has not been no more than a just recognition accorded by her generous sister States. And if she is proud of the names of Grant and Sherman, and Sheridan and McPherson, and Chase and Stanton, and Hayes and Garfield, it is only because, for their illustrious services to the whole people, the whole people are proud of them also. [Applause.] And if for these distinguished men Ohio first claimed National consideration and honor, it was not because they were her sons, but only because, the better knowing their worth, she put them forward for the common good. She has had no selfish purposes to subserve. She has none such to-day. She fully recognizes and appreciates the fact that what is best for the whole Republican party is best also for her.

Moved by no other feeling, she has a name to place before this convention. You have heard it before. From one end of this land to the other it is as familiar as a household word. It is the name of a man who has been an acknowledged leader of the Republican party for the last thirty years. He is identified with every triumph of our most wonderful career. He stood at the fore-front in the struggles with slavery. He was a very pillar of strength to the Government in its death grapple with secession. His personal impress is upon every line of reconstruction and when our National integrity had been preserved by the valors of our soldiers in the field, and there came that wild and senseless mania of inflation that threatened to sweep the country and tarnish the National honor, it was his luck to stand in the breach as no other man stood [applause.] Save only the war, that was the greatest danger that ever menaced the American people. A failure to resume specie payment in 1879 would have been almost as thoroughly fatal to this Republic as would have been success for Lee at Gettysburg. It was patriotic courage and heroism in the one case no more than in the other that saved the day and accomplished for us the sublime results in which we have ever since rejoiced. The people of this country know and appreciate that fact, and they still have a profoundly grateful recollection of the services thus rendered; and this is especially true at this particular time, when Wall street gambling and what you characterized in the platform this day adopted as Democratic horizontal reduction, have done their bad work. The flood tide of prosperity has been arrested, and we have been brought through the several stages of stagnation and decline to the very verge of business demoralization and panic. Confidence has been shaken and impaired; its restoration is to be the controlling question of the coming campaign, and if we would act wisely here we must recognize that fact and make our nomination accordingly. What man, then, of all those presented to this body for consideration most fittingly and completely meets the preferments of this situation? In answering that question, I can say as others have said here to-night, that I have no thought or word of detraction or disparagement for any other name that you will be called upon to consider, and in the language of that platform, as it was read by our friend from New York here to-night, I too can say, and I do say without hesitation, that in the present Chief Magistrate we have had a wise, a conservative and a patriotic administration. [Applause.] And I can say also, that no man's admiration is greater than mine for that brilliant genius from Maine.

Gentlemen of the Convention—I shall not compliment anybody else until I come to my man. And resuming, permit me to remind you that you have violated an old time-honored maxim, "never to hollor until you get out of the woods." [Cheers and applause.] You should not do so, for I may want to say something now that you will not want to applaud; for that which I want to say further to this convention is this, that what we want, what we must have, what we stand here to-night charged with—the grave and responsible duty of laying the foundation for the success in November next—and to that end that we may have that success, we must nominate a man who will make not only a good President, but the best possible candidate. [Cheers and applause.] That is what we want, and to that end we want a man who is distinguished, not so much for the brilliancy of his genius as for that other safer, better and more assuring quality, the brilliancy of common sense. [Applause.] We not only want a man who is a pronounced Republican, thoroughly tried, and in the crucial tests of experience [at this moment the speaker was interrupted by loud and continuous calls of the name of Blaine], but we want also a man whose very name will allay instead of exciting the distrust that disturbs the industrial interests of this country. [Applause.] He must, of course, as gentlemen have eloquently said from this platform to-night, be a friend to human liberty, to equality of rights. [Cries of "Blaine" from the gallery and all over the house.] He could not be a Republican if he was not. He must believe, as it has been well said, in the protection of American citizens at home as well as abroad. Not only that, but he must be a man who can find, under the Constitution and laws of this country, some method whereby the brutal butcheries of Danville and Copiah may be prevented. [Applause.] Not only must he believe in these things, but there is one thing in which our platform reminded us to-day that he must not believe in, and that is a substantial reduction of the duties on iron and steel and wool. On the contrary, he must believe, and that, too, in the most unqualified sense, just as we have declared here to-day, in the protection of American industries, the development of American resources, and in the elevation and dignity of American labor [applause]; and not only must he believe in these elementary and fundamental propositions of Republicanism, but he must have a record so clear, so bright, as to not only challenge, but defy criticism and assault, and at the same time make him a representative of all the highest and purest motives and aspirations of the great Republican party; and over and above all this he must be a man in whom the people believe. [Cries of "Blaine, Blaine."]

Oh, no, sir, no sir—not simply that he is honest, not simply that he is capable, not simply that he loves Republicanism and hates Democracy, not simply that he is loyal and patriotic, but that combined with all these essential attributes he possesses, by reason of his experience, that essential that makes him most potent to deliver us from the evils that threaten our present safety. Nominate such a man and victory is assured; we will have four more years of Republican rule, during which time this Republic will continue to grow with greatness at home and increased respect abroad. As such a man I nominate John Sherman, of Ohio. [Applause.]

JUDGE HIPP, of Kentucky, seconded the nomination of Sherman.

WHEN Vermont was reached, Governor Long, of Massachusetts, arose and nominated George F. Edmunds, of Vermont, in a neat and telling speech.

AT 1:46 a. m., the Convention adjourned until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

CHICAGO, June 6.—It was twenty minutes past the hour (11 o'clock) for the meeting when the gavel fell, and the Chairman announced that the Convention would be opened with prayer by Rev. Dr. Scudder, of the Second Presbyterian Church.

The Convention then proceeded to ballot, and resulted as follows: Blaine, 334½; Arthur, 278; Edmunds, 93; Logan, 63½; John Sherman, 30; Hawley, 13; Lincoln, 18; General Sherman, 2. Necessary to a choice, 411.

THE second ballot resulted as follows: Blaine received 349; Arthur 276; Edmunds, 85; Logan, 61; John Sherman, 28; Hawley, 13; Lincoln, 4; General Sherman, 2.

The third ballot was taken as follows: Blaine, 375; Arthur, 274; Logan, 53; Edmunds, 67; John Sherman, 25; Hawley, 13; Lincoln, 8; W. T. Sherman, 2.

The announcement of the third ballot was received with long-continued applause from the Blaine men, and Foraker, of Ohio, moved to adjourn until 7:30 p. m. There were loud cries of "No!" from all over the hall, and Roosevelt, of New York, attempted to make a speech, but was yelled and hissed.

THE motion to adjourn was lost by a vote of 450 to 364. The call of States on the fourth ballot was again begun with the following result: Blaine, 541; Arthur, 207; Hawley, 15; Logan, 7; Edmunds, 41; Lincoln, 2. Blaine was declared the nominee.

Mr. Burleigh, New York, being recognized by the Chair amid the applause which followed, took the platform and said, "Mr. President, in behalf of the President of the United States, and at his request, I move to make the nomination of James G. Blaine, of Maine, unanimous, and I promise for the friends of President Arthur, who are always loyal at the polls, and for Northern New York—twenty thousand Republican majority—and I promise you that we will do all we can for the ticket, and for the nominee, and will show you in November next that New York is a Republican State. It elected James A. Garfield, and it will elect James G. Blaine, of Maine." [Applause.]

The Convention then adjourned until 8 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.—It was 8:15 o'clock when the Chairman's gavel fell and announced that prayer would be offered by Rev. Dr. Chas. O'Reilly, of Detroit, the Treasurer of the Irish National League of America, and is the first Catholic to open a Republican National Convention with prayer. It may then be said that the Republicans have introduced two new features in this convention—a colored man as temporary Chairman and a representative of the Catholic Church invited to participate in the official proceedings on an equality with Protestant ministers. Doctor O'Reilly is a life long Republican.

A resolution limiting speeches of nomination to ten minutes passed, and the Clerk proceeded to call the roll of States for nominations for Vice-President. No response was received till Illinois was reached, when Senator Plumb, of Kansas, came forward and in appropriate remarks nominated Senator John A. Logan. Judge Houk, of Tennessee, seconded the nomination. The nomination was also seconded by Thurston, of Nebraska; Lee, of Pennsylvania; Horr, of Michigan; Clancie, of North Carolina, and several others.

Congressman Davis demanded a call of the roll on the nomination, and the motion being seconded, it was so ordered.

When New York was reached, George William Curtis announced that his delegation was not quite ready, and asked that time be given to make the count. The request was granted, and the call proceeded with the remaining States.

The roll being completed New York was again called and Mr. Curtis announced the vote of that State as one vote for Foraker, of Ohio, six votes for Gresham, of Indiana, and sixty votes for Logan. The vote was unanimous with the exception of these seven from New York, Logan's total vote being 779. The nomination was then made unanimous.

The thanks of the convention were tendered to the temporary and permanent officers, and the convention then adjourned.

Fainting.

It is surprising how everybody rushes at a fainting person and strives to raise him up, and especially to keep his head erect. There must be an instinctive apprehension that if a person seized with a fainting or other fit, fall into a recumbent position death is more imminent. Always remember this fact, namely: Fainting is caused by a want of blood in the brain. The heart ceases to act with sufficient force to send the usual amount of blood to the brain, and hence the person loses consciousness because the function of the brain ceases. Restore the blood to the brain, and instantly the person recovers. Now, though the blood is propelled to all parts of the body by the action of the heart, yet it is still under the influence of the laws of gravitation. In the erect position the blood ascends to the head against gravitation, and the supply to the brain is diminished as compared with the recumbent position, the heart's pulsation being equal. If, then, you place a person sitting whose heart has nearly ceased to beat, his brain will fail to receive the blood; while, if you lay him down with the head lower than the heart, blood will run into the brain by mere force of gravity, and in fainting in sufficient quantity to restore consciousness. Indeed, nature teaches us how to manage fainting persons, for they always fall and frequently are at once restored by the recumbent position into which they are thrown.

—How vast are the periods of life allotted to the longeval trees may be judged, says Mr. L. H. Grindon, from the following list of ages known to have been reached by patriarchs of the respective kinds: Elm, 300 years; ivy 335 years; maple, 516 years; larch, 576; orange, 630 years; cypress, 800 years; olive, 800 years; walnut, 900 years; Oriental plane, 1,000 years; lime, 1,100 years; spruce, 1,200 years; oak, 1,500 cedar, 2,000; yew, 3,200 years.

XLVIIIth CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—SENATE.—On motion of Mr. Ingalls, the Senate resolved that when it adjourned to-day it be till Friday next. In accordance with the unanimous understanding of yesterday the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the calendar of cases unobjected to. Among the bills read the third time and passed were the following: The bill introduced by Mr. Conger granting an annual leave of absence with pay to letter carriers. The bill as introduced provided for thirty days leave, but the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads recommended that a vacation without reduction of pay be made fifteen days instead of thirty. The bill was amended to correspond with the recommendation of the committee, and then passed. It authorizes the Postmaster General to employ a number of substitute letter-carriers, rendered necessary by the provisions of the bill, the compensation of such substitutes to be at the rate of $600 a year.

HOUSE.—Mr. Payson, of Illinois, as a question of privilege, called up for consideration the bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands to prevent the unlawful occupancy of public lands. Mr. Henley, of California, made the point of order that the bill was not of that character which was privileged under the Holman resolution, but the point was overruled by the Speaker.

WASHINGTON, June 4. SENATE.—Senate not in session.

HOUSE.—Mr. Hopkins (Pa.) from the Committee on Public Buildings, submitted a report on the charges of corruption or collusion in regard to the selection of a site for a public building at Brooklyn, N. Y. [The report says: "Every opportunity was offered for the introduction of evidence to sustain the charges, and we unhesitatingly report that there has not been produced before us a scintilla of evidence which in the slightest degree reflects upon the integrity of the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the Supervising Architect, or upon any other officer of the Government."] The report is accompanied by a resolution discharging the committee from further consideration of the matter, which was placed on the House calendar. The Oregon Central land grant forfeiture bill coming over from yesterday as unfinished business, was taken up and passed. The Senate amendments were now concurred in to the bill establishing a Bureau of Labor Statistics. The Senate amendments were concurred in to the joint resolution making an additional appropriation for the relief of sufferers in Louisiana from the overflow of the Mississippi. A bill was passed amending the act to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of laws relating to mineral lands. [The provisions of the bill were extended to the States of Louisiana, Florida and Arkansas.] Mr. Henley (Cal.) then called up the bill forfeiting lands granted to the California and Oregon Railroad Company, except such lands as were granted for that portion of the road which was completed before the 1st of July, 1880. After vigorous remarks by Mr. Cobb (Ind.) in support of the bill a vote was taken on its passage. It stood—yeas 183, nays 13; no quorum. The House then adjourned.

WASHINGTON, June 5.—SENATE.—Senate not in session.

WASHINGTON, June 5.—HOUSE.—The Senate bill was passed authorizing the Mayor and City Council of Nashville to construct a free bridge across the Cumberland River. The Senate bill was passed authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Leavenworth, Kas. The House proceeded to vote on the California and Oregon land grant forfeiture bill, with a result of yeas, 145; nays, 6. No quorum. A call of the House disclosed the presence of 210 members, and the bill was passed—yeas, 150; nays, 10. On motion of Mr. Thompson (Ky.), June 14 and 17 were set apart for the consideration of the bill to amend the Thurman sinking act. On motion of Mr. Henley (Cal.) the Senate bill was passed, authorizing the claimants to the Rancho de Napa, California, to prove their title. Mr. Payson (Ill.) called up the Senate bill to repeal Section 1 of an act entitled "An act making grant of lands in alternate sections to aid in the construction and extension of Iron Mountain Railroad, from Pilot Knob, in the State of Missouri, to Helena, in Arkansas, approved July 4, 1866." In consideration of the forfeiture the Iron Mountain Railroad Company is released from the obligation of the land grant railroad. The amendment was adopted, excluding from this release that part of the railroad between Poplar Bluff, Mo., and the Arkansas State line; and as amended the bill was passed. Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—SENATE.—Senate not in session.

HOUSE.—The House went into Committee of the Whole on the private calendar, Mr. Wellborn, of Texas, in the chair.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—SENATE.—Senate not in session.

HOUSE.—A bill was passed amending the act to determine the jurisdiction of the U. S. Circuit Courts, and to regulate the removal of causes from State to Federal Courts. Mr. Hoblitzell, from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, reported adversely the bills to repeal the Civil Service act. A bill passed authorizing the National Academy of Science to receive and hold trust funds for the promotion of science.

Attempt at Suicide.

NEW YORK, June 7.—The following is the Herald's cable: PARIS, June 8, 1884.—There was quite a consternation yesterday at the Grand Hotel. A young English lady, in a robe de nuit and disheveled hair, suddenly jumped from an upper window into the court-yard, behind the Director's office. The window was forty feet above the pavement of the court-yard, and ten feet beneath the window is a wide ground-glass projection. The young lady crashed through the glass, cutting herself painfully, but not dangerously, and instead of being dashed to pieces on the pavement, as seemed to the spectators to be inevitable, she, by an extraordinary chance, landed on the neck of one of the ex-Khedive's horses that happened to be standing in the court-yard, and thus almost miraculously was saved from death. The young lady is Miss Prettyman, who, with her parents, Colonel and Mrs. Prettyman, came to Paris to see the Grand Prix. Miss Prettyman, a few days ago, was attacked with symptoms of typhoid fever, and during an excess of delirium, caused by the fever, made the fatal leap. Beyond the shock of the fall she sustained no serious injury.

Deliberate Suicide of a Lunatic.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., June 8.—A very peculiar suicide occurred to-day at the State Insane Hospital. Albert Dupee, a gigantic, athletic negro, was found dead in bed this morning. He had tied the corner of the sheet to the head-rail, made one wrap tight around his neck, evidently lying on his back, then holding the other end in his left hand making it taut, he turned over upon his face and smothered himself to death without disturbing the bed covering.

Death of Henry C. Work.

HARTFORD, CONN., June 8.—Henry C. Work, the noted song writer and composer, died this evening of heart disease. "Marching Through Georgia," "Grandfather's Clock" and "Dear Father, Come Home with Me Now" were written by him.

Pleasure Boat Run Down by a Yacht.

LONDON, June 8.—The Duke of Edinburgh's yacht to-day ran down and sank a pleasure boat near Devonport. Two persons belonging to the boat were drowned. The Duke was on the yacht and was greatly distressed by the accident.

We are authorized to announce

J. Q. WARD,

of Harrison county, as a candidate for Judge of the Superior Court, from the 3rd Superior Court district, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Reid. Subject to the action of the Democratic party.

We are authorized to announce

DR. JAMES S. BROWN,

of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23d Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

THE demand for the old ticket grows day by day.

THERE are forty-five counties in this Superior Court district.

THE Sun, a two cent morning daily made its debut in Cincinnati Thursday.

THE Kentucky delegation was a unit in its opposition to Chicago whisky.

AT the conclusion of the Chicago convention the city was full of bursted booms.

THE Republicans here are much elated over the result of the National Convention.

THE nomination of Blaine created some dissatisfaction among the Republicans in the east.

IF Mr. Blaine has to defend himself before his party, his ride to the White House will make him desperately sea-sick.

AT the present rate of increase, in a few weeks, the candidates for Superior Judge will be as thick as black berries.

A Republican ratification meeting was postponed at North Vernon, Indiana, by a cannon's bursting and decapitating a negro.

THE Falmouth Democrat comes out a nine column folio this week, an indication that its section appreciates a good local paper.

THE next National circus billed for Chicago is that run by the Democrats. The performance will commence on the eighth of next month.

AT the twenty-ninth session of the Kentucky Medical Society, held in Bowling Green last week, Dr. Pickney Thompson, of Henderson, was elected president.

THE New York World says: "It is not a position on the retired list of the army that Grant is in need of. He should be placed in the hands of an austere guardian."

BOB LINCOLN's boom, which at one time threatened to become formidable, proved to be very weak, and its slight recognition by the convention must be humiliating to him.

THE nominating speeches made in the Chicago convention last week, were devoid of that eloquence that distinguished them four years ago, but they answered the purpose.

LYNCH, the colored man who was chosen temporary chairman of the National Republican convention, was born a slave, was poorly schooled, but is said to be possessed of much good, hard sense.

JUDGE O'HARA has declined to make the race for Superior Judge. Probably because to make a successful canvass for the office it is necessary to dispense with all other business and take to the hills and hollows till the nomination or election for that officer.

WARD, member of the late confidence firm of Grant & Ward, is kicking vigorously against having all the blame of the ignominious manner in which they swindled their customers heaped upon him. He don't think that he is the only rascally member of the firm.

THE Methodist General Conference makes adultery the only ground for divorce, and prohibits Methodist ministers from remarrying the guilty party. It also adopted a rule that no one should be excluded from the churches and colleges of its denomination on account of color or previous condition.

THE Republican convention last week demonstrated that the party had to make a ticket that could defeat either Tilden or Cleveland, and it remains to be seen how badly it failed.

The municipal election at Richmond, this State, last Saturday, was the occasion of much excitement, one killing, and the destruction of much bad whisky. Richmond is a local option town.

MR. TILDEN, by his silence, is keeping the Democratic party in suspense, and not treating other presidential aspirants right. With him on the track other candidates will not waste their time in a canvass, but with him off a lively time among candidates would be the result.

JOHN R. McCLEAN, owner of the Enquirer, has bought the Cincinnati News Journal, and henceforth it will appear as the Sun News Journal. The News Journal proved to be an unprofitable venture, and was sold under an order of court for $25,000. The large fish swallow the small ones.

How would Tilden and Carlisle do?—Georgetown Times.

First rate, but Kentucky's electoral vote is certain for the Democrats, and they want a candidate for Vice-President in a doubtful State which may be carried by him. When Mr. Carlisle is put on the Presidential ticket he should be placed at its head.

OWEN county having cast the largest Democratic vote in the last general election, J. J. Orr, chairman of the Owen county committee is the chairman of the Superior Court District Committee, and will convene that body to take action with regard to the pending contest for Superior Court Judge.

GEN. GRANT will not be called upon to explain in a Court of Justice, the rascality his firm was engaged in. He and his sons were anxious to draw their shares of the enormous profits, which were so large that an imbecil ought to have known that they were illegitimate. The great and mighty Grant has surely been given a black eye.

THOSE who were elected, and intend to act as school trustees the ensuing year, should procure the new school law and inform themselves. Its requirements are materially chaneged in many respects, and with the new law a new era in the educational business should be inaugurated, and there is no better field for the work than Kentucky.

BLAINE rushes into print to deny that he ever said to anybody that he was indifferent as to the result at Chicago because of a belief that the Republican candidate, whoever he may be, is doomed to defeat. And yet the Times is informed by a most reliable gentleman that Mr. Blaine made that very remark to him within the past twelve months. But that was when the Truthful Jeems had given up politics, and was posing as a historian.—Louisville Times.

THOS. BUFORD, who escaped from the Anchorage Asylum several months ago, since which time his friends supported him in Jeffersonville, Indiana, voluntarily returned to the Asylum at Anchorage, one day last week. Buford's health has been declining for several months, and acting under the advice of his friends, he returned to his former place of confinement, emaciated and a miserable man to spend his few remaining days with those whose duty it is to provide for and protect him.

THE National Republican Convention presented as strong a ticket as was possible. Blaine and Logan have been prominent in their party for many years and will come as near polling the strength of the Republican party as any other combination that could be formed. Blaine's nomination is a decided triumph of the rank and file over the politicians and office holding elements, which constituted Arthur's entire strength in the convention. Blaine combines several elements of strength that no other candidate could, and the contest between the two parties will be an animated one.

EX-GOV. BLACKBURN, says: "In former years I knew Lynch, the temporary Chairman of the Chicago Convention, very well. He belonged to Alfred Davis, and was a plantation preacher, but he has developed more mental strength than any one supposed at that time. He attended the family garden, and has often watered my carriage horses and blacked my boots. He was a general favorite and was regarded as a man of good common sense, but his political advancement has surprised those who knew him then. I met him a few years ago in Washington, and when I asked him how he enjoyed his honors, he replied that he was very well pleased."

They kill two men at a time in Cincinnati, now.

Gen. Abe Buford, of Louisville, committed suicide on the 9th inst., at his nephew's in Danville, Indiana, —cause financial trouble.

THE Owen County Democrat has entered its fourth year. Brother Lillard says it has not made money enough to build many stone fronts but is paying its way.

THE Democrats now behold the team with which they have to compete for possession of the White House, and it behooves them to be harmonizing all the factions with which the party is at present disturbed.

THE Yeoman says Gen. Hewitt has gone to Springfield, Illinois, to obtain information in regard to the working of the Board of Equalization of that State, the provisions of which are subtantially the same as those of our law.

TAKING the chances of being told to mind our own business, we will suggest as follows to Bellevue and McVille: Pool your issues, work together to get a mill located on the river, between the two towns and then never stop work till a pike is built across the country to Gunpowder creek via Waterloo. You have built the two ends of a city which will grow up directly if this programme is faithfully executed. This accomplished, then demand the capitol of the county.

By odds the funniest and most remarkable case on record, was an attachment levied on a jug of "bug juice" at Sardis last Friday. The contents were worth $2, while the cost amounted to four times as much —Robertson Tribune.

Tuesday last, William Anderson who lived near Sherman, Grant co., was found in his cornfield with his throat cut from ear to ear, but his windpipe was only partially severed. He was so near dead that he imparted no information concerning the matter, and all the circumstances seem to indicate that he was murdered.

Bob Petitt, colored, who was sentenced to 21 years in the penitentiary at the May term of the Grant county Circuit Court, for the murder of T. L. Garnett, escaped from the jail at Williamstown last Saturday night by working through the ceiling where repairs were being made, thence to the roof from which he descended by means of a rope made of his bed clothing.

Florence X-Roads is to have a post-office. At the last accounts a name had not been decided upon, and always being ready to assist our neighbors in the hour of trouble, we suggest Rouse as an appropriate name.

The pump on the public cistern is on a strike, which greatly incommodes a number of the county officers, to say nothing about visitors to the town who often desire to slake their thirst at that institution. A new pump is needed.

Prof. W. S. Cole's school at Florence X-Roads closed last Friday. Each of the larger girls had prepared and read a prize essay, the subject being, "The State of Kentucky." Miss Octavia R. Rouse received the prize. Joe Souther and John Aylor were the dignified judges. Mr. Cole treated the scholars to ice cream and other dainties and all were sorry to bid their teacher farewell.

Gold watch clubs are being formed in some of the town's of the State. The plan is for fifty people to form a club, each to pay in one dollar a week. Every week a watch is purchased and the name of a member drawn from a hat. In this way, in the course of a year, each one gets a $50 gold watch.—Lexington Transcript.

The happy trio, Berkshire, Blythe and Bange, spent last Thursday on Gunpowder, Blythe being the only successful one in the party. He landed some very fine bass, while his comrades sat on the bank and viewed his luck with amazement. When they returned that night Berkshire and Bange were sad, but Jerry was lithe.

Many of our citizens attended the Latonia races last week, but none of them were so fortunate as to own any of the pools that cost a trifle and won a hatfull. There is nothing small in a Burlingtonian's judgment on a horse and he always backs the one that sells the highest, provided, however, he has money enough to buy a pool.

The attendance at the moonlight picnic in Walton's grove Saturday night, was very large, and the occasion particularly noted for the fine enjoyment it furnished the youth and beauty of the country there assembled. Good order prevailed, and many were the sad hearts in that assemblage when the announcement, "get your partners for the last quadrille," greeted their ears.

Two legacies made things lively at Hebron Saturday, and during the breeze one of them shot the other in the forehead, but the skull being harder than the bullet, the latter flattened and made a circuit about half around the head, and beneath the skin. But the ball taken effect in the shin, the result would have been a corpse. Gabe Haskins who did the shooting was sent to the penitentiary for two years and about the close of Judge McManama's term of office, for some trouble in which he used a shovel with some effect on another negro.

A letter received from Everett Hall locates him at Wm. Walton's in Missouri. He says Mr. W's corn is knee high; that he has a fine watermelon patch and plenty of strawberries and that the work it takes two men to do here one can do out there. He thus tells about a cyclone which they call a torpedo: We were standing in the yard one day when we heard something snorting and puffing like a steamboat, and discovering what was coming, the boys shouted, "let's go into the cellar," and they immediately disappeared beneath the ground to wait developments which we presume were not serious, as the letter is silent on that question.

Some parties from Rising Sun came to Bellevue the other day and obtained a warrant and searched the house of E. D. Hunton, who lives on Scott Rice's farm, for some stolen property, among which was some household goods that were recovered. Hunton and his wife were arrested, and Monday the County Attorney went down and prosecuted them before Squires Green and Sutton for grand larceny, and they were put under bonds for their appearance in answer of that charge at the next term of the Circuit Court. Not long since Hunton and his wife moved from Rising Sun to their present place of abode, and the stealing was done previous to their moving. A second warrant was obtained, and when the attorney left another search of Hunton's premises was about to be instituted.

THE DEDICATION,

Of the Christian Church at Bellevue.

Last Sunday was the day selected by the Christian church at Bellevue to dedicate their new church edifice, and the morning being beautiful and bright, at an early hour all the highways leading to that unusually quite town presented quite an animated appearance, and before the hour for the introduction of the religious services arrived, the church was filled to its utmost capacity, and the building was surrounded by buggies and spring wagons, occupied by persons anxious to be within ear-shot of the minister. The crowd was not confined to the church and its immediate vicinity, but the entire town was necessary to contain it. This large assemblage was not composed only of Kentuckians, but many persons from our neighbor State, Indiana, were to be found mingling pleasantly with the crowd. The services were conducted by Elder Howe as previously appointed, and the sermon was highly complimented by those of the congregation who succeed in securing a position close enough to the speaker to hear.

Those who had charge of the arrangements anticipated a large crowd, and well did they meet its requirements. The good cooks of that part of the county had prepared a bountiful and elegant dinner sufficient for a larger crowd than that present at dinner time, and if anyone left without having thoroughly satisfied the demands of the inner man, it was purely his own fault.

Just before the hour for dinner a considerable shower of rain fell, which laid the dust and cooled the air, leaving the people in a good humor and fine condition for enjoying the substantials and viands to which they were soon invited to partake.

The rain afternoon put the crowd to some inconvenience again to secure shelter, but all managed to keep dry, and it was late in the afternoon before Bellevue was entirely vacated by the visitors and allowed to relapse into its usual Sunday's tranquility.

NOTES.

A big dinner and a new church draw a large crowd.

It was the largest crowd that ever inhaled Bellevue.

The church building is a neat, modest structure, and on some occasions will be rather small.

Those who prepared and arranged the table were very industrious seeing that everybody was fed.

We understand that the church dedicated Sunday can be used by any other denomination, when the Christians are not occupying it

The church was not entirely out of debt Sunday morning, but a little judicious soliciting eliminated the indebtedness in short order.

Dr. Platt says that such a crowd is an every Saturday afternoon's occurrence, but we think the magnitude of Sunday's crowd excited the doctor.

The edibles were well concealed before dinner else Jim Westbay would not have gone to a private house to dine. He is good at estimating what amount a basket contains.

Among those we noticed from a distance, were Alf Gaines and wife, of Bullittsburg; Will Davis and wife, Frank Gordon, wife and daughters, of Hebron; Jas. Riley, of North Bend and Miss Kate Kreylich, of Kenton county; G. S. Losier of Lawrenceburg, and Dr. Langsdale, of Rising Sun.

Those that could not get in the house were divided into groups which were discussing various subjects. One group was discussing the Republican nomination for President; another, base ball; another, tobacco culture; another, the R. H. & G. turnpike, and another and by considerably the largest, from whence would come the fisher loaves on which to feed the multitude.

We overheard a conversation between two or three of the farmers of the vicinity, who were talking about raising sweet potatoes. One old gentleman said he had seen potatoes raised in the neighborhood that were shipped to New Orleans for the purpose of making hulls for boats. As it was Sunday and the potatoes referred to were so large, we concluded that the gentleman thought it no more harm to tell about a big potato than a small one, and shotter the day the better the deed."

Tobacco Market.

(Cincinnati, Friday, June 6, 1884.

The offerings for this week were 600 hhds. new and 172 hhds. old, against 832 hhds. new and 314 hhds. old the previous week, 1,118 hhds. new and 103 hhds. old the corresponding week last year.

With a fair demand, and small offering of the better grades of new leaf and colory lugs, prices were much stronger and acceptable by the shipper. For the common sorts the demand and prices continue as previously reported. The market for old tobacco opened very flat on Tuesday, but to-day, on account of several purchasing orders, the market closed strong for sweet grades. Common kind not in demand.

Fears of Trouble Between Orangemen and Nationalists at Newry.

France Gets the Seal of the Franco-Anam Treaty—An Invasion by Servian Refugees.

DUBLIN, June 7.—Newry dispatches this afternoon state that the excitement is intense. The town is filling up with rival factions coming to attend the Orange and Nationalist meetings. The Orangemen are determined to hold a meeting despite Spencer's advice. The Nationalists are determined that the Orange gathering shall not affect the success of their meeting, and say that they will not be cowed by the Orangemen. There are fears of bloodshed before noon to-morrow. There are six hundred extra police and five hundred soldiers, and the Mayor telegraphs for more. The priests, he says, advise congregations to attend the Nationalist meeting. Thousands of Orangemen have arrived at Belfast from England. Geddis, Secretary of the Orange Committee of London, has sent the following: "I leave for Ireland to-night with five thousand Irishmen from London, Manchester and Liverpool. No surrender. Orangemen are determined to hold a meeting." Earl Spencer has issued a proclamation forbidding the Orangemen's counter demonstration to the Nationalists at Newry to-morrow. Numbers of infantry, lancers and police are assembled there to preserve order. Father McCantan has advised his congregation to attend the Nationalist meeting. The stopping of the Orange counter demonstration is regarded as the greatest concession to the Irish Nationalists in fifty years. Intense excitement prevails among the Orangemen.

PARIS, June 7.—The treaty between France and Anam has been signed. The Provinces of Bin Thuan and Than Gon are restored to Anam; a customs system similar to that in Cochin China is established, and French military occupation at all the stragetic points of Anam and Tonquin are to be effected if necessary. A permanent French garrison will hold a portion of the citadel Hue.

BELGRADE, June 7.—The Servian Government announces that a number of escaped revolutionists whom Bulgaria has allowed to live in the vicinity of the Servian frontier around Widdin and Sofia have invaded Servian territory, burned houses and killed the Mayor of Bautchie, near Vratarnitza. They have occupied Mount Drevenik, near Rescovitz. The entire Timok District is alarmed. The Premier has demanded satisfaction.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.

The Epilobium Plant Likely to Revolutionize the Cotton Trade of Europe.

LONDON, June 7.—Certain Russian naturalists claim to have made a discovery in reference to the epilobium plant which may revolutionize the cotton trade of Europe. The epilobium, which is more popularly known as the "willowherb" from the shape of its leaves, has hitherto been cultivated solely for its flower, which grows from the top of the pod. The Russian savants now claim that this pod can be made to yield a fiber possessing many of the valuable qualities of cotton fiber. In the experiment made this fiber has been ginned, spun and wove successfully on a small scale. An economic society in St. Petersburg has now petitioned the Czar to set aside some State lands for the scientific cultivation of epilobium and the continuation of experiments for improving the fiber.

Gold and Silver.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—The Director of the Mint, in his annual report on the production of the precious metals, states the total production during the calendar year 1883 as follows: Gold, $30,000,000; silver at its coining rate, $46,200,000. Arizona produced $950,000 gold and $5,200,000 silver; California, $14,120,000 gold, $1,460,000 silver; Colorado, $4,100,000 gold, $17,370,000 silver; Dakota, $3,200,000 gold, $150,000 silver; Idaho, $1,400,000 gold, $2,100,000 silver; Montana, $1,800,000 gold, $6,000,000 silver; Nevada, $2,520,000 gold, $5,430,000 silver; New Mexico, $280,000 gold, $2,845,000 silver; Utah, $140,000 gold, $5,620,000 silver. The remainder was produced principally in Alaska, Oregon, Georgia and North Carolina. This is a reduction of $2,500,000 gold and $600,000 silver from the yield of 1882.

Oscar Not Disappointed.

LONDON, June 7.—Oscar Wilde, who was married last Tuesday to Miss Constance Lloyd, has written a silly and perfectly characteristic letter to a friend, in which he says he has not been disappointed in married life. He feels confident of his ability to sustain its labors and anxieties, and sees an opportunity in his new relations of realizing a poetical conception which he has long entertained. He says that Lord Beaconsfield taught the press of England a new style of oratory, and similarly he intends to set an example of the pervading influence of art in matrimony.

The Rio Grande Flood.

EL PASO, TEX., June 7.—The Rio Grande is rising rapidly, with great damage to property along the bank. Trains can not cross the railroad bridges. It is feared the street car bridge will be washed away before morning, which would cut off travel between Mexico and this side. No trains or mails in from the north.

Fatal Railroad Accident.

AKRON, OHIO, June 7.—A serious accident occurred this afternoon on the Cleveland, Pittsburg and Toledo Railroad, about ten miles east of here. A gravel train, with a boarding-house car attached, was being backed up at the rate of twenty miles an hour when the boarding car jumped the track, causing a bad wreck by the other cars being piled on top of it. The boarding car was well filled with Italian laborers, several of whom were terribly crushed. Two have since died. The balance are in a critical condition. Quite a number were seriously injured. No names can be learned.

A Veteran Journalist Dead.

NEW YORK, June 7.—General James Watson Webb, the veteran journalist, died at 4:30 o'clock p. m. to-day, aged eighty-three years. He was identified with many public and political enterprises during the first half of the century. He was United States Minister to Brazil from 1861 to 1865.

Schooner and Crew Lost.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., June 7.—A schooner from Grates Cove, Trinity Bay, reports that a fishing schooner owned by Wm. Shawnar, of that place, and commanded by his brother, Neil Shawner, with a crew of thirteen hands, was wrecked in Trinity Bay, and all hands perished.

TERRIBLE ENCOUNTER.

Four Persons Engage in a Deadly Conflict, in which Two of them are Fatally Wounded.

INDIANAPOLIS, June 6.—Quite a bloody affair is reported as having occurred near the State Insane Asylum, three miles from the city, at an early hour this morning. John Bridges and James Barrett with their wives are the dramatis personæ of the difficulty. The two families, although near neighbors, have been at swords' points for a long time. Barrett was out working in his grounds early this morning. He says that while so engaged Bridges fired at him through the fence. He ran behind a tree and Bridges fired at him a second time. He returned the fire, and then they met and clinched and while they were struggling, Mrs. Bridges appeared, and simultaneously with her Barrett's wife. They, too, finally got into the scuffle, which was ended by Bridges getting away from Barrett, and armed with a hoe, he struck Mrs. Barrett a terrible blow with it, which felled her to the ground and fractured her skull. He struck her three times. She is badly bruised and wounded. Barrett was shot twice in the melee, and the chances are that the first shot will prove fatal. He was also severely wounded in the head. Mrs. Bridges had her face badly bruised by Mrs. Barrett, and Bridges was struck in the head with a bullet, which made a very severe wound, and was badly battered and cut with whatever Barrett had in his hands when the encounter occurred between the two men. Bridges has run off and his wife is placed under arrest. The doctor reports the Barretts as dangerously injured, and he regards Barrett's recovery as very doubtful.

Mrs. Bridges says: "For years the two men have been quarreling. They had lawsuits frequently, and one time Barrett shot at my husband. He would aggravate me by whistling at me whenever I was alone, and told bad stories about me, but his wife and I have been neighborly. This morning I heard four or five shots follow each other rapidly. I ran out to where the two men were; heard Barrett call for his wife, and noticed his arm pointing a pistol from behind a tree. I said, "Don't shoot!" but he fired and then I ran to my husband and caught him by the neck and tried to pull him away. I got his revolver and threw it over the fence. Blood was spurting from Bridges head and running over him, and blood was coming also from a hole in Barrett's breast. Bridges got up and was going away, when Barrett struck him with a milk pail. Then Mrs. Barrett came at me, struck me on the head, and raised this lump, and broke the hoe over Bridges' head. They have arrested me when I was acting simply as a peace-maker."

Bright Crop Prospects.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., June 6.—S. W. Tallmadge has classified the late official reports of the State Agricultural Departments and United States Statistical Agents of Pennsylvania, Dakota, Minnesota, Nebraska and California. He finds crops in excellent condition, with the promise of making the largest yield ever raised in the above States. Mr. Tallmadge thinks his new estimate will exceed by twenty to twenty-five million bushels the estimate he made a month ago. The Pennsylvania Agricultural Secretary writes that an abundant yield is probable. Dakota reports farmers in fine spirits over fine crop prospects. Minnesota's Secretary expects a yield of 38,000,000 bushels. Nebraska reports a probable yield of 31,750,000 bushels. California estimates 45,000,000 to 48,000,000 bushels, against 31,000,000 bushels last year.

FATAL POISONING.

A Family Mistakes Wild Parsnip for Spikenard Root.

SALEM, IND., June 6.—Mr. William Simpson resides about two miles south of Salem, near Fredericksburg. Yesterday afternoon he and two of his sons and a little daughter were in the field at work. The father remarked that he hadn't seen any spikenard-root for ten years. Shortly after the eldest son, aged about twenty-five, dug up what he supposed to be the kind of root spoken of, and ate it, giving a small part to the two children. The father ate none. The root proved to be the poisonous wild parsnip, so virulent that in a few minutes the young man fell down insensible. The father sent the little girl for aid, and on the way she took sick and vomited, but brought a neighbor, nevertheless. At this juncture a team happened to pass, but before the sick man could be put into the wagon he was dead, and the other boy was quite sick. The boy and the girl are still quite sick. This morning they were much improved, with considerable hope of recovery.

SALVATION ARMY.

Twenty-Four Men and Women Arrested at Cleveland.

CLEVELAND O., June 7.—For some time complaints have been made by residents of Erie and Garden streets of disturbance caused by meetings of the Salvation Army. Its leaders were warned by police authorities to desist, but they refused to do so. Last night a squad of officers surrounded their meeting and marched twenty-four men and women to the Central Station, and locked them up. To-day the Police Judge was severe in his denunciation, after which he fined the leader, Captain Walker, $15, and said that the others might go on the payment of $5 each. Several demanded jury trials, and their cases were continued under $100 bail. Florence Altoff, a girl with the army, was arrested on a charge of incorrigible conduct preferred by her father.

Choked to Death.

FORT WAYNE, IND., June 7.—Christian Hurtman, a German aged thirty-eight, committed suicide this morning by hanging in his barn. The body was discovered by his little daughter at ten o'clock tonight. Hartman recently returned from the insane asylum at Indianapolis. Coroner Dr. Dinnin held an inquest and returned a verdict of suicide while laboring under temporary insanity.

A MANIAC'S RAZOR.

Bloody Work of a Crazy Man at Cincinnati.

He Cuts a Girl's Throat Without Provocation, and Then Nearly Severs His Own Head—A Horrible Sight.

CINCINNATI, June 9.—Last night, shortly before twelve o'clock Nellie Barnet, one of the many girls who nightly parade along Elm street met Wm. Kinsweiller, a German aged twenty-three years, and took him up to her room, on the third floor of the building No. 293 Elm street. Winsweiller acted strangely, but talked in a manner that would tend to contradict his actions. After entering the woman's room, Winsweiller must have become suddenly insane, for he got up and produced an old razor from his pants pocket and at once set about using it on the woman, in the right side of whose throat he succeeded in inflicting an ugly, but not serious, gash. The woman was at the time in bed, but, jumping up, she ran to the front window and screamed for the police, the blood streaming from the wound in her neck all the while. Before the officers arrived a large pool of the crimson fluid had dropped to the side-walk below. While she was crying for help the maniac, for such he evidently was, cut his own throat from ear to ear, almost severing his head from his body and causing death almost instantly. In the pockets of the deceased's clothing were found a number of letters, dated principally from New York, where the dead man has a brother. Another was from Julius Mendelsohn, of No. 216 East Seventh street, New York. The dead man had been hovering in the vicinity of Eighth and Elm streets for some hours previous to being taken in by the woman Barnet. In conversation with him he then showed signs of insanity. He was a single man and a watch case maker, employed at Dueber's Watch Case Company's factory in Newport, Ky. His parents live in New York City. The corpse presented a frightful appearance as it lay completely covered with blood. The bed clothing was also saturated with the fluid. The woman Barnet had never met the deceased before last night.

Red Cross Relief Boat.

WASHINGTON, June 8.—Letters received here by the American Association of the Red Cross, from its President, Miss Clara Barton, who has been engaged in relief work along the Lower Mississippi, state that she is now moving slowly up the Ohio River with the Red Cross steamer on her return home. She stops at out-of-the-way places, where much distress still exists, and has furnished hundreds of destitute families with household supplies that could not otherwise have been acquired in months. She reports vast tracts of country in the Lower Mississippi Valley as still under water, and the suffering extreme. Much stock must perish notwithstanding timely responses to the Red Cross appeal. She is still shipping to local societies South, and will keep one general agent in the field until the calls for help cease.

Female Employment in England.

LONDON, June 8.—It is significant of the progress of female employment in England that the Prudential Company, one of the greatest insurance offices, is now entirely served by female clerks, and that 4,353 are employed in government offices; but the excess of women is still so great that Lord Shaftsbury has just declared that the greatest benefit that could be conferred on England would be the emigration of from two to three hundred thousand women.

Child Fatally Beaten.

WHEELING, W. VA., June 8.—At Hinton, this State, some feeling has recently been excited by a woman's abuse of an adopted child. The woman is Henrietta Hossler, a grass widow, and her cruelty culminated in a beating she gave the child with a poker, finally felling it to the floor with a blow over the head, which the doctors say will result fatally. She is in jail to await the result of the injuries.

Nationalist Parade.

NEWRY, June 8.—The Nationalists paraded the streets with bands and banners. A meeting was held outside of the town. On the return of the Nationalists from the meeting they threw stones, and when the procession reached a Protestant quarter of the town the Protestants retaliated. Several shots were fired, and the police and troops interfered. Four Nationalists and several Orangemen were arrested, and many persons injured.

Chinese Minister Going to Peru.

WASHINGTON, June 8.—The Chinese Minister is going soon to Peru, accompanied by Mr. Chion, the interpreter, who is unusually accomplished, and four others of the Legation. The Minister goes to present his credentials to the new government of that country, as he is accredited to Peru, as well as the United States. He will return here this year.

New York Political Situation.

NEW YORK, June 8.—Friends of Mr. Flower who have been canvassing the political situation in this State, say of 108 delegates elected outside New York City to the Saratoga Convention, the first choice of all is Tilden, except in Syracuse, where the feeling is for Cleveland, and the second choice, according to their observations, stand: Flower, 82; Cleveland, 26.

Miss Gabrielle Greeley Injured.

CHAPPAQUA, N. Y., June 8.—Miss Gabrielle Greeley's horse ran away, capsizing her, breaking her right shoulder and bruising her internally.

—John Greene Lane, who died at Fredericksburg, Va., recently, not only was a noted man locally, but his home was on the crest of the bloodiest hill in America. The hill rises like a green knob from the western edge of the town, overlooking neighboring houses as a steeple overlooks surrounding roofs. It is known to all survivors of the battle of Fredericksburg as Mary's Height, at the foot of which ran the stone wall where so many human waves were dashed into the spray of death. The Mansion House now sits in serenity on the heights, while sheep tinkle their bells peacefully and with strange melody up and down the green slopes.—Chicago Tribune.

—In this day and age of the world science answers some of the knottiest questions, and fearlessly takes up every branch of human knowledge. And so when the Hartford Sunday Journal, in its wild search for truth, asks: "In waltzing with a young lady not over seventeen years, pretty, and one of the never-get-dizzy sort, does the young man go around the lady, or does the young lady go around the young man?" we refer to our scientific sapiency, and unhesitatingly answer "undoubtedly."—Oil City Derrick.

THE HAMPTON INSTITUTE,

What this Beneficient Enterprise is Doing for the Education of Indians and Colored People.

The Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute at Hampton, Va., held its anniversary exercises on Thursday, May 22, and the reports made on this, its sixteenth year, show a good degree of prosperity. There have been on its rolls the past year five hundred negro and one hundred and twenty Indian students—the former preparing to go South to teach their people, where nearly a thousand already trained In this Institute have established themselves and are doing a great work in the colored common schools, especially of Virginia and North Carolina. Of Indians seventy have already graduated and gone back to their homes in Dakota, and in the Southwest, and are mechanics, farmers and hired hands. Not over seven have gone back to Indian ways, and eight have died. On the whole the record of educated Indians who have in the past three years returned from Hampton to their homes has been satisfactory.

The school has been built up since 1868 at a cost of about $400,000, and is free from debt. It is now seeking an endowment for its annual expenses, which are $50,000 in excess of aid received from the Government. It is a private, not a public institution, duly incorporated, and is aided only in a moderate degree by the Government, which helps the Indians only.

The Trustees are making a special effort to secure sixteen thousand dollars to build a new dormitory for colored girls, two hundred in number, who are now greatly crowded and suffering for want of room. General S. C. Armstrong, the principal of the school (address, Hampton, Va.), will gladly receive and acknowledge contributions for any of the purposes of the school, which is an attempt to solve two of the race problems of our country. It is conducted on the manual labor plan. Student work out on the farm, or in the shops, the most of their expenses. They have earned this year over $35,000. The whole six hundred—a little less than one-half are girls—are literally working out their own salvation. This feature of self-help commends the school to the confidence and interest of all good citizens.

A Queer Fish-Pond.

On top of the Record building, ninety feet from the ground, is a water-tank with a capacity of 18,000 gallons. It was never thought of as a source of fish supply, but a recent discovery has suggested almost unlimited possibilities in that direction. On last Friday the engineer had occasion to clean out the tank, when he was amazed to find in one of his buckets a squirming eel, nine inches long and of fair proportions. In a few minutes he found other fish in his buckets, a catfish four inches long, and more eels, until he had a fair collection, which he carefully preserved. A fishing pond nearly a hundred feet above the ground is a novel affair, and this singular "catch" from the Record's roof has provoked a great deal of curiosity and speculation. The water is pumped into the tank from the water main on Chestnut street, coming into the three-inch pipe of the Record through an inch connecting pipe. It then passes to the force pump and is forced 100 feet into the tank above through a three-inch pipe. The fish probably came from the Schuylkill while very young and small, and found their devious ways to the tank, where they grew up. What they fed upon is a mystery, and the proofreader, who usually spends five hours every week in baiting his hook for Wissahickon catfish, will now look for mountain trout on the Record's roof.—Philadelphia Record.

A Left-Handed Compliment.

They were lovers, and were also walking and talking together in a very affectionate manner, and she no doubt intended to pay him a compliment, but somehow or other he did not take it as such.

"If you don't stop flattering me so much, I'll have to put my hands over my ears so as not to hear the compliments," he remarked.

"Put your hands over your ears!" she exclaimed. "Why, your hands are not half big enough."

He is not quite sure now whether it is his small hands, or large ears, of which he is to be proud.—Texas Siftings.

—Taylor County, Georgia, can produce a negro man who has been stone blind for thirty-one years, yet has always been able, with the assistance of his wife, to make a decent living for themselves and a large family of children. His name is Ben Caldwell, and a more industrious negro can not be found in the county. A number of farmers will testify to the fact that Ben can pick 150 pounds of cotton per day, and with the assistance of his two little boys he can tie into bundles all the grain of any kind that three "cradlers" can cut, as fast as it falls from their cradle. He can cut wood, split rails, and do most any kind of farm work. One of the most remarkable features of his character is that he never forgets a voice after once catching its sound, and is enabled to call most any person by name with whom he is acquainted.—Butler Herald.

—The good Samaritan took the man who had been robbed and wounded to an inn and gave the landlord two cents to take care of him. Oh, that we might have Oriental taverns! But civilization has advanced.—Henry Ward Beecher.

—A mulatto girl with a remarkably pretty but peculiar face was engaged by a shrewd Western showman. He had a tooth extracted from each side of her mouth and inserted a pair of long tusks, covered her ears with false ones like a beast's, bleached and tangled her abundant hair, and instructed her to utter an unintelligible jargon. Thus she was transformed into a valuable curiosity, and her wages of fifteen dollars a week did not satisfy her. On the arrival of the show in Indianapolis she attempted to quit it, and a row resulted in an exposure of the fraud.—Chicago Times.

—But the fools of wives are direfully plentiful—the silliest of silly fools, who want to be flirts after marriage and whose ideas of life are dress and gadding. ALL weakness and ill health owes its origin to an impure state of the blood and a weakness of the urinary and digestive organs. A medicine that will strengthen these organs, and at the same time purify the blood, will assist nature in curing nearly every disease that human flesh and blood is heir to. Such a remedy is Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla, and, although it possesses no cathartic or diuretic effect, its use will soon establish a regular habit of body as well as cure weakness of the kidneys, indicated by urinary sediments, nervousness, etc.

Cancer for Fourteen Years!

SPARTANBURG, S. C., March 14, 1884.

I have for 14 years been a sufferer from a running sore on my face that every body called a CANCER. I have used over $300 worth of medicine and found no relief. About four months ago I bought one bottle of Swift's Specific from Dr. H. E. Heinitsh, and since have bought five others, have taken it, and they have CURED ME sound and well! My face is as free from a sore as anybody's, and my health is perfectly restored. I feel like forty years had been lifted off my head. Yours thankfully,

A THRILLING EPISODE.

A Locomotive Engineer's Instinct—How He Saved A Train and How He Saved Himself.

On one of the darkest and stormiest nights of the recent unusual winter, the express on one of the leading New York railroads was moving westward from Albany. The engine's headlight threw a strong reflection in advance, but the storm was so blinding it was almost impossible to distinguish anything even at a short distance. Under such circumstances instinct necessarily takes the place of sight. All seemed to be going well, when, in an instant, the engineer reversed his engine, applied the air brakes, and came to a full stop. Why he did so he could not tell any more than any of us can account for the dread of coming disaster and death, and to the wondering inquiry of his fireman he simply said: "I feel that something's wrong." Seizing a lantern he swung himself down from the cab and went forward to investigate. Everything appeared to be right, and he was about to return to his engine when his eye caught sight of a peculiar appearance at the joint of the rail next to him. Brushing the accumulated snow away, he looked a moment, and then uttered an exclamation of horror. The rails on both sides had been unspiked and would have turned over the instant the engine touched them. What inspired this attempt at train-wrecking is unknown, but it was presumed the confederates of some prisoners who were on the train hoped, in the confusion of an accident, to deliver their friends.

Engineer John Donohoe, of Albany, to whose wonderful instinct was due the salvation of the train, when asked by the writer why he stopped his engine, said:

"I can't tell why. I only know I felt something was wrong."

"Do you have these feelings often when upon the road?" continued the writer.

"No, very seldom, although for the past twenty years I have been in a condition to feel apprehension at almost anything."

"How is that?"

"Why, I have been a victim of one of the worst cases of dyspepsia ever known. I have not been confined to my bed, as like thousands of others, I am compelled to work whether able or not. Indeed, when it first began I had only a loss of appetite, a faint feeling that would not go away and a bad taste in the mouth, but I finally got those terrible craving and gnawing feelings that make life so unbearable and are known as general debility."

"What did you do?"

"I tried physicians until I became discouraged. I gave eight different ones fair tests, but none of them benefited me. I then tried proprietary medicines, but they failed, likewise. It looked pretty dark for me so far as any more peace or enjoyment in this world were concerned and I became terribly discouraged."

"You certainly do not look that way now."

"Oh, no, indeed, I am in perfect health now," was the reply "and I propose to continue so. My nervousness is entirely gone; I can sleep nights; the aching numbness has disappeared; the pale, sickly appearance has given place to the color of health, and I have readily put on flesh. This is what has been accomplished by means of Warner's Tippecanoe. If I can be cured after a chronic illness of nearly a quarter of a century I believe all suffering in a similar manner can be restored by using the same great remedy."

Such is the testimony of a man who could detect and remove unseen danger on the road but could not remove the dangers from within his own system until brought face to face with the great preparation above-named which did so much for him and can do as much for all those who require it.

A KNOCK-DOWN argument—"I shall never be found out, and I need the money more than the boss does."

A PERFECT MEDICINE CHEST.

SING SING, N. Y., POST OFFICE, March 19, 1883.

One week ago, while engaged in my duties as Assistant Postmaster, I was taken with a violent pain or kink in my back; it was so painful I could hardly breathe, and I ached all over my body. I immediately sent for an ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER and applied it over the seat of pain; in twenty minutes I was entirely relieved and cured. I have used Allcock's Plasters in my family for over twenty years, and have found them wonderfully effective in curing coughs, colds and pulmonary difficulties. They are a perfect medicine chest; they cure without the slightest pain or inconvenience, never leaving a mark on the skin.

THOS. LEARY,
President of Village of Sing Sing, N. Y.

A HEALTHFUL DIURETIC.

BOUND BROOK, N. J., April 2, 1883.

You advise placing Allcock's Porous Plasters, in dyspepsia, on the pit of the stomach; in ague-cake, on the spleen; in torpid liver, over that organ; but I really think you should also recommend that one or two Plasters be put over the kidneys. They stimulate, strengthen and act as powerful diuretics, thus casting out many poisonous acids and salts. I have had fever and ague; all remedies I took produced little or no effect until I put an Allcock's Porous Plaster over each kidney; their action being more than doubled, the malaria was quickly washed away. I have also had several attacks of rheumatism and two of gout, and by applying the Plasters over the local pain, and also over the kidneys, I again found your Plasters wonderfully efficacious. H. K. THOMAS.

Beware of imitations. "Allcock's" is the only genuine Porous Plaster.

STONES IN THE KIDNEY

Expelled by the Use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy (of Rondout, N. Y.)—after Several Able Physicians had Failed, and the Patient was Nearly Ready to Abandon Hope—The Substance of a Long and Grateful Letter.

One of the most remarkable cases that has ever been brought to the notice of the public is that of Mr. J. S. Beach, of Stone Ridge, Ulster Co., N. Y. Mr. Beach had suffered since October 18th, 1874, from the presence of Calculus or Stone in the right Kidney. No less than seven physicians were employed at different times, to whom Mr. Beach paid hundreds of dollars for medical treatment, with only temporary relief.

By the urgent solicitations of his friends he was induced to try DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. He experienced a marked improvement from the first day he began to use the medicine: on the 15th of September he voided a stone as large as could be passed through the natural channel.

Mr. Beach concludes a long letter to Dr. Kennedy by saying: "It will always afford me pleasure to recommend the FAVORITE REMEDY to those who may be suffering from difficulties of the Kidneys and Bladder, or any disorders arising from an impure state of the blood."

RAILWAY COLLISION.

An Excursion Train Dashes Into a Regular Accommodation.

Eight Men Killed, All Trainmen—A Number of the Excursionists Injured.

PHILADELPHIA, June 14.—By a collision with an excursion train on the Camden road this morning, Engineers Palmer, and Baxter, Conductor Smith, Baggagemaster Vaughn, Mail Agent Wylie and Fireman Barber were killed and many persons injured. The excursion party were of the Camden Presbyterian Church. The following are the injured: Henry Deets, scalded and hip broken; Leonard Bausch, badly scalded; Frank McCormick, leg broken and scalded; John Caskey, slightly injured; Wm. Caskey, internally, can not live; Joseph Rosenbaum, express agent, badly injured about the back and head; Al. Glan, conductor, internally; Cora May Lippincott and brother, Eugene, slightly. The injured were placed under immediate medical attendance, and removed to Camden. After the collision all scrambled out of the car, some by the windows. Both locomotives were demolished, and the escaping steam made it impossible for some time for any one to approach to within fifty feet of the wreck. Great excitement existed among the people in the two trains, especially among women and children. Frank Tenton was rescued from the wreck after laborious work of two hours, but died soon after.

FALL OF A TENEMENT HOUSE.

Three of the Inmates Killed in the Ruins.

NEW YORK, June 14.—The five story tenement building, No. 68 Grand street, fell in with a crash this afternoon, burying three of the occupants in the ruins. The building is an old, rickety affair, and had been pronounced unsafe by the building department several weeks ago, but further than ordering the tenants to vacate nothing had been done. Most of the families fortunately had moved out. At the time the building fell, the police and fire department who had been notified of its dangerous condition, were on hand, and formed a cordon on each street corner, preventing all pedestrians from going near the building. One woman was taken out severely injured. The building was swaying perceptibly this morning and the few remaining occupants were ordered out. Those who were in the house when it fell are said to be tenants who were engaged in moving out their household effects.

General Butler's Letter.

NEW YORK, June 13.—Mr. J. W. Seymour, of this city, having written to General Butler, advising him to run for President, with or without a nomination, has received the following reply:

MY DEAR SIR:—I have received your very kind note. Thanking you for your expressions of regard, I take leave to say that there is one view in which I think my possible election to the Presidency, of which you speak, might be at least of service to the country. Although running upon the Democratic ticket, or in any event as a Democrat, with my views, which I believe to be Democratic upon many subjects, I should receive, I fain would believe, a very large colored vote at the South. The colored men know me. I have commanded many, many thousands of them as soldiers, so that my election as a Democrat would wipe out the color line at the South by bringing the two races together under one political head and that seems to me to be a very great desideratum, and would be the greatest service to the country, as it might be the last which I could render. The Democratic party of the South would be obliged to acknowledge me as a Democrat, the colored men would know me as a friend, and the relations are not incompatible, so that I can't see why even as firm a Republican as yourself might not feel justified, as you say you would do, in voting for me. Renewing my thanks, I am very truly, your friend and servant,

BENJAMIN F. BUTLER.

IN THE SOUDAN.

El Mahdi, With a Large Army Marching on Dongola.

CAIRO, June 13.—The opinion of the citizens here, and who have had private advices from friends there, favors the theory of the terrible massacre at Berber. It is reported that General Gordon has left Khartoum, and is on his way down the river Nile. El Mahdi is marching toward Dongola with 35,000 troops. He hopes to capture the town before the feast of Ramadan, June 25. In an interview at Abu Hamid Major Kitchener expresses the belief that if Dongola falls it will be almost hopeless to try to save Egypt. He regards the situation as awful.

Illinois Crop Prospect Not Cheering.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., June 14.—The latest returns to the Illinois Department of Agriculture gives a more discouraging outlook for the growing crop than one month ago. In the central and southern divisions there is much complaint of the appearance of a large amount of chess. In the northern division there is a prospect for 94 per cent, of an average crop; in the central division 77; in the southern 64. In average seasons over one-half the winter wheat crop of the State is produced in the southern division, and a partial failure of over one-third of the average yield per acre will greatly reduce the crops of the State.

THE MASSACRE AT BERBER.

Three Thousand Five Hundred Citizens and Soldiers Butchered.

LONDON, June 14.—An Arab, at Korosko, who claims to be the sole survivor of the Berber garrison, says he was present when the rebels attacked Berber, May 23. The garrison defended the town for two hours, but the rebels forced their way into the city, where they immediately massacred 1,500 of the garrison and 2,000 of the male population. The women and children were spared. The story is believed by Major Kitchener and the son of Hussein Pasha Khaliff, Governor of Berber.

Interior Water-Ways.

WASHINGTON, June 14.—The report on a line of interior water-ways for the sea coast defenses has been made public, and asks for ten thousand dollars for completion of surveys and a general review of the line. Estimates and plans have nearly all been collected, except between New York City and Delaware Bay, and from the Cape Fear River to Charleston, S. C. With the exception of these two lines surveys are completed for the chain from Massachusetts Bay to the Rio Grande.

BURNED TO DEATH.

A Ladle Containing Twenty-Five Hundred Pounds of Molten Iron Falls From Its Place—One Man Buried in a Pit With the Molten Mass—Two Other Workmen and a Little Boy Injured.

CINCINNATI, June 14.—A horrible and fatal accident occurred about noon yesterday at the Cincinnati and Newport Iron and Pipe Foundry, Newport, Ky. The work of pouring the molten iron into the pipe molds was in progress. The molds are placed in pits in the ground, most of them from twelve to fifteen feet in depth. At the pit, one of the huge ladles containing twenty-five hundred pounds of the melted metal, had just been swung into position by means of the crane, from which it was hanging above the ground. John W. VanOsdel, the boss pitman, had grasped the handle of the ladle and was preparing to pour its contents into the moulds. At that instant the bolt which fastened the ladle to the crane gave way. The huge receptacle with its molten mass fell with a tremendous crash, striking on the edge of the truck and dashing the molten iron in all directions. By the unexpected fall, Van Osdel was jerked forward and went headlong into the pit, and the molten iron poured in upon him, covering the bottom of the pit to the depth of several inches. Henry Howard, colored, the crane tender, was caught by the splashing iron though several feet away, and his clothing in front was reduced almost to ashes, while his legs, body and face were badly burned. Chris Schweitzer was struck in the face and arms by part of the iron, and injured painfully but not seriously. His little boy, eight years old, who had come with his dinner, was standing behind the crane when he was struck in the face, legs and feet by some of the metal. His terrible cries gave the first information to the other workmen in the place as to what had happened. The Pipe Company has taken charge of the medical treatment of the injured men, and is doing everything to alleviate their sufferings. All expenses will be borne by it, and all personal losses made good as far as can be.

TILDEN GROWING OLD.

Wearing the Marks of Public Burdens, With Shattered Nerves, and Old Age, He Desires the Repose of Private Life, and Submits to the Will of God in Deeming His Public Career Forever Closed.

NEW YORK, June 11.—Samuel J. Tilden has written a letter to Chairman Daniel Manning of the Democratic State Committee of New York positively declining a renomination for the Presidency. In his letter he says:

"Having now borne faithfully my full share of labor and care in the public service, and wearing the marks of its burdens, I desire nothing so much as an honorable discharge. I wish to lay down the honors and toils of even quasi party leadership, and to seek the repose of private life. In renouncing a renomination for the Presidency I do so with no doubt in my mind as to the vote of the State of New York, or of the United States, but because I believe that it is a renunciation of re-election to the Presidency. To those who think my renomination and re-election indispensible to an effectual vindication of the right of the people to elect their rulers—violated in my person—I have accorded as long a reserve of my decision as possible, but I can not overcome my repugnance to enter into a new engagement which involves four years of ceaseless toil. The dignity of the presidential office is above a merely personal ambition, but it creates in me no illusion. Its value is a great power for good to the country. * * * To all who have addressed me on the subject, my intention has been frankly communicated. Several of my most confidential friends, under the sanction of their own names, have publicly stated my determination to be irreversible. That I have occasion now to consider the question, is an event for which I have no responsibility. The appeal made to me by the Democratic masses, with apparent unanimity, to serve them once more is entitled to the most deferential consideration, and would inspire a disposition to do anything desired of me if it were consistent with my judgment of duty. I believe there is no instrumentality in human society so potential in its influence upon mankind for good or evil as the governmental machinery for administering justice and for making and executing laws. Not all the eleemosynary institutions of private benevolence to which philanthropists may devote their lives are so fruitful in benefits as the rescue and preservation of this machinery from the perversions that make it the instrument of conspiracy, fraud, and crime against the most sacred rights and interests of the people. For fifty years, as a private citizen, never contemplating an official career, I have devoted at least as much thought and effort to the duty of influencing aright the action of the governmental institutions of my country as to all other objects. * * * The canvass and administration, which it is desired that I should undertake, would embrace a period of nearly five years, nor can I admit any illusion as to their burdens. Three years of experience in the endeavor to reform the municipal government in the City of New York, and two years of experience in renovating the administration of the State of New York, have made me familiar with the requirements of such a work. At the present time the considerations which induced my actions in 1880 have become imperative. I ought not assume a task which I have not the physical strength to carry through. To reform the administration of the federal government, to realize my own ideal, and to fulfill the just expectations of the people, would indeed warrant, as they could alone compensate the sacrifices which the undertaking would involve. But, in my condition of advancing years and declining strength, I feel no assurance of my ability to accomplish those objects. I am, therefore, constrained to say definitely that I can not now assume the labors of an administration or of a canvass, undervaluing in no wise that best gift of heaven—the occasion and the power sometimes bestowed upon a more individual to communicate an impulse for good. Grateful beyond all words to my fellow countrymen who would assign such a beneficent function to me, I am consoled by the reflection that neither the Democratic party nor the Republic for whose future that party is the best guarantee, is now, or ever can be, dependent upon any one man for their successful progress in the path of a noble destiny. Having given to their welfare whatever of health and strength I possessed or could borrow from the future, and having reached the term of my capacity for such labors as their welfare now demands, I but submit to the will of God in deeming my public career forever closed."

SAMUEL J. TILDEN."

DON'T WANT IT.

Tilden Meant What He Said In His Letter of Declination.

ST. LOUIS, June 13.—The Republican, of this city, in referring to Mr. Tilden's letter, having interpreted it to mean that when Mr. Tilden is nominated he will not refuse to be the candidate of the Democracy, the Evening Chronicle telegraphed Mr. Tilden asking him if that was the proper construction to be placed on his letter. The telegram was referred by Mr. Tilden to Daniel Manning, Chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee, and he to-day sent the following reply: "Mr. Tilden's letter means what it says. His declination is absolute. Under no circumstances will he be a candidate."

Eminent Scientist Dead.

LONDON, June 14.—Dr. Zebach, Curator of the University of Jena, and a well-known authority on sciences, is dead.

DESTRUCTIVE FROSTS.

Great Damage to the Crops in the New England States.

Potatoes, Corn, Vines, and Garden Truck Seriously Affected—The Cranberry Crop Entirely Ruined.

BOSTON, June 15.—Reports from various parts of New England state that a heavy frost Saturday night caused considerable damage to growing crops. The Cape Cod district reports the prospects for the cranberry crop entirely ruined, involving the loss of many thousands of dollars. Potatoes and corn and vines of all kinds are seriously affected. Much corn will have to be replented, and owing to the lateness of the season a short crop will result. In Norfolk County, Mass., entire crops of vegetables were destroyed, and farmers who make a specialty of early produce will suffer extensively. In nearly all sections the growth of crops is retarded.

Foreign News.

LONDON, June 15.—Gladstone is reported to have admitted to a friend that he expects the Ministry to be changed within a few weeks. He is preparing a speech of defense of his policy, probably the last he will make. The News says the Franco-British agreement practically guarantees English interests in Egypt, and that a vote of opposition in the Commons will cause the dissolution of Parliament, unsettle English relations generally, and make the prospect of a European war distinct. Orders have been issued from Cairo to facilitate a retreat from Dongola. Khartoum is believed to be safe for the present. A monster meeting of Orangemen at Belfast passed resolutions threatening Lord Spencer, if he visited Belfast, as he has proposed doing. Spain and Italy have advised the Sultan of Morocco to refuse to sign the treaty prepared by France.

Talking at Long Range.

CINCINNATI, O., June 16.—A party of gentlemen in the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Company's office yesterday had the unusual experience of talking over twelve hundred miles of wire. The occasion was a test of the new Hopkins patent telephone, or, rather, patent transmitter. First, a circuit of about six hundred miles was made by way of Grafton, Va., the telephone wires being attached to the telegraph wires, and conversation was carried on between the two telephones in an ordinary tone. Then the circuit was enlarged, taking in Baltimore, and there was very little if any diminution in the sound that traveled over the long distance.

Fatal Boiler Explosion.

BUTLER, PA., June 15.—A boiler used in pumping the Balhridge oil well, No. 13, exploded this morning with a terrific report, demolishing the boiler and engine-house, and horribly mangling the engineer, Richard Walker, causing his death in a few hours. His son, who was near his father, was thrown fifteen feet, receiving fatal injuries. A small frame building near by, occupied by Walker, was partially demolished and his daughter slightly hurt. The cause of the explosion is not known.

A Change of Gauge.

CHATTANOOGA, June 15.—The management of the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railroad have decided to reduce the gauge from five feet, the present standard, to four feet eight and one half inches, the Northern standard. The work will be commenced in sixty days. The change will be made on the entire system, from Cincinnati to New Orleans. President Scott thinks all the Southern roads will soon adopt that system.

Prominent Minister Dead.

NEW YORK, June 15.—Rev. Alexander J. Baird, D. D., of Nashville, Tenn., died suddenly to-day in Park Avenue Hotel. He was on his way to attend a meeting of the Presbyterian Allience at Belfast, Ireland. Dr. Baird was one of the prominent preachers in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

English Farmers Decreasing.

LONDON, June 15.—Recent statistics give a startling view of the decay of farming in England and Wales. There were 25,964, or ten per cent. fewer farmers in 1881 than in 1871, and eighteen per cent. more bailiffs. There were also ten per cent. fewer farm laborers.

A Chance for Inventors.

LONDON, June 15.—A reward of 2,000 crowns ($2,420), it is said, has been offered by the fire insurance companies of Sweden for the most practical device to arrest sparks and cinders from locomotive and steamboat smokestacks.

A Druggist's Mistake.

WASHINGTON, June 15.—A child of J. R. Ross died here yesterday from the effects of morphine administered by mistake for quinine. The drug clerk who put up the prescription was held responsible by the coroner's jury.

A Royal Wedding.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 15.—Princess Elisabeth of Hesse and Grand Duke Sergins of Russia were married yesterday in the Winter Palace at St. Petersburg with the usual pomp. No dynamite.

A New Railroad in Egypt.

LONDON, June 15.—A party of engineers is ordered to Egypt at once to survey the desert between Suakim and Berber, with the view of the construction of a railway.

A Fall of Fifty Feet.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, O., June 15.—Chas. Fisher, of this place, was fatally hurt this morning by falling a distance of fifty feet, from the new Court-house.

XLVIIIth CONGRESS.

First Session.

WASHINGTON, June 11.—SENATE.—Mr. Sherman reported favorably the House bill authorizing the National Academy of Science to receive and hold in trust funds for the promotion of science and other purposes. Passed. Mr. Dawes offered a resolution, which was adopted, instructing the Committee on Indian Affairs to investigate during the recess the condition of the several tribes in Indian Territory, the tenure by which the lands in the several reservations are held, the need of legislation in respect thereto, etc. Mr. Voorhees' resolution, offered yesterday, directing the Secretary of the Interior to furnish information as to the contracts for supplying beef cattle to Indians, was taken up, discussed and laid over for a week. At one o'clock the Senate went into secret session on the Consular and Diplomatic Bill, the pending question being the amendment to appropriate $250,000 to carry out the provisions of the Neutrality Act.

HOUSE.—On motion of Mr. Dorsheimer the Senate Bill extending the terms of the act of August 8, 1882, to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between the United States and Europe to August 8, 1886, was taken up and passed. Other business was pushed aside, and at 11:20 the House went into Committee of the Whole on the River and Harbor Appropriation Bill. Various amendments were offered and rejected. Mr. Holman made a point of order against the Hennepin Canal clause, claiming it should have been reported from the Committee on Railways and Canals. Mr. Stone replied that the message of the President and other papers in reference to it had been referred to this committee, and its jurisdiction was thereby established.

WASHINGTON, June 12—SENATE—Mr. Hill gave notice that he will call up the Senate Postal Telegraph Bill Monday. Mr. Allison suggested that Mr. Butler's resolution for investigation of the New York banks should be referred to the Committee on Finance. "I am afraid," said Butler, "that if the committee get hold of this resolution it will meet the fate of the similar one on the same subject." Mr. Morrill took exception to the remark, and declared the Finance Committee was proceeding with the subject diligently. After debate, the resolution went over for the present. The Consular and Diplomatic Bill was taken up and passed by forty yeas to two neys (Vance and Van Wyck).

HOUSE.—The House assembled at 10 o'clock, in continuation of yesterday's session, and went into Committee of the Whole on the River and Harbor Bill. Amendments were adopted providing for a Missouri River Commission; also the substance of Cox's bill, preventing obstruction and offensive deposits in New York harbor. Without concluding the bill, the committee rose at 11 o'clock. The House adjourned and was immediately called to order again for to-day's session. Consideration of the bill in relation to the electoral count, which has been made the special order for to-day, was postponed, and the House again went into Committee on the Whole on the River and Harbor Bill. Numerous amendments to the section providing for surveys were added.

WASHINGTON, June 13. SENATE.—Mr. Vance introduced a bill for the removal of the Eastern Cherokee Indians to the Indian Territory. On motion of Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin, the House bill for the allowance of a number of claims known as "Fourth of July claims," reported by the accounting officers under act of July 4, 1884, was taken up.

HOUSE.—The Senate amendments to the Consular and Diplomatic and Pension Appropriation Bills were non-concurred in. Mr. Pryor then took the floor on the Electoral Count Bill. Mr. Pryor's argument was in support of the theory of the House Bill that the Senate and House did not meet as legislative bodies or in an official capacity as such bodies, but, as conveniently designated, a board for the sole and special purpose of counting the electoral votes, and that as such the powers of each member of this board are coequal. Adjourned until Monday.

WASHINGTON, June 14.—SENATE.—Senate not in session.

HOUSE.—The House resumed consideration of the amendments in dispute between the two Houses upon the Post-office Appropriation Bill, the pending amendment being that incorporating $185,000 for special facilities on trunk lines. A motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment, and agree to the same with the amendment increasing the appropriation to $200,000 was agreed to. A motion that the House concur in the remaining amendments increasing from $4,000,000 to $4,300,000, the appropriation for railway post-office clerks, was lost. The Pacific Railroad business was taken up and pending discussion, the House adjourned.

An Insane Man at Large.

SHORTLESVILLE, PA., June 15.—Joel Brensinger, a giant lunatic who escaped from the residence of his father, in Schuylkill County, passed through this place and vicinity yesterday and created intense excitement, especially among the female population. He attempted to enter the house of Mahlon Spangler by force. When he found that he could not enter he became frantic with rage, destroying fences and trees, and killed a large number of chickens. The lunatic was driven away by a pistol fired after him. Yesterday morning he entered the house of Emanuel Long. Mrs. Long, being the only one present at the time, became frightened and gave the alarm to the neighbors. They collected together and tried to capture the wild man, but without avail. He fought like a tiger, but was covered with blood from an injury received while passing through the woods. The lunatic entered several other houses, and tried to break anything that came in his way. He broke into the wagon shed of Charles Kauffman, and, with a hatchet that was found there, destroyed two valuable wagons, besides chopping up a lot of walnut lumber at the residence of John Lutz. He entered the kitchen and broke all the dishes. Great efforts were made to capture the crazy man by the farmers through whose lots he crossed, but to no purpose. Brensinger is strongly built, and weighs 230 pounds. He escaped from the residence of his father, who had him confined in an outbuilding for some years. He possesses the strength of four men. The female portion of the country are afraid to go to bed, from fear that the lunatic will break into their homes.

General Gonzalez's Imprisonment.

NEW YORK, June 13.—General Gonzales, one of the most prominent leaders in the Cuban revolution, has arrived in this city, after three years' imprisonment in Morocco and one in Spain. He escaped a few weeks ago, and undaunted by the severity of his prison life, proposes to join Aguero in his newly improvised movements. He speaks of his prison life in Africa as a period of the cruelest torture. Whole families were condemned to exile there, and the husbands, wives and children were kept in separate prisons, and never permitted to communicate with one another. "For the last infringement of prison discipline," he added, "we were put in irons, and often simply for speaking our minds too freely about the Spanish Government. The food we got was not fit for dogs; but badly as we were treated at Morocco, it was even worse when we were brought back to Spain, and the confinement was closer. We were punished and abused by our keepers for the least expression of political opinion."

A German scientist has drawn attention to the fact that the Sutlej, one of the great streams of British India, is probably the swiftest large river in the world, having a descent of 12,000 feet in 180 miles, an average of about fifty-seven feet per mile.

—Pittsburgh, Pa., has a promising heavy-weight girl, aged thirteen, who tips the beam at four hundred pounds. She is a native of Westmoreland County. Her mother is also a large woman, weighing no less than two hundred and seventy pounds.—Pittsburgh Post.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The week opened with a decided predisposition to discount the probability of drouth, and in the first half this feeling became more pronounced, especially in dark and heavy styles. The latter realized the highest prices of the year for Green-river leaf of common to good grades, while Burley styles responded to a degree which was barely perceptible, though by means of small offerings somewhat fuller ranges were secured. In the latter part of the week there have been general rains, affording in the sections heard from admirable planting seasons. Large offerings have been put up latterly, and the tone has been more quiet, but prices have been affected very slightly—say one or two bids on medium burleys. Dark and heavy leaf has ruled firm to the close, the styles on offer being almost exclusively Green-river fillery styles and regie types. Dark wrappers and long leaf have appeared very sparingly. Yellow Pryors have been notably strong. Lugs have ruled steady to firm. We quote full weight packages of new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 30 @ 6 50	$6 50 @ 7 50
Common lugs	6 75 @ 7 15	7 00 @ 8 00
Medium lugs	7 35 @ 7 65	8 00 @ 9 00
Good lugs	8 00 @ 8 25	10 00 @12 00
Common leaf	7 50 @ 8 50	10 00 @13 00
Medium leaf	8 75 @ 9 50	14 00 @17 00
Good leaf	10 00 @11 00	18 00 @21 00
Fine and fancy leaf	12 00 @16 00	23 50 @....

VICE CHANCELLOR SIMRALL, of Louisville, has decided that Miss Bessie White, a graduate of the pharmaceutical department of the University of Michigan, was entitled to mandamus against the Kentucky State Board of Pharmacy, which means that the latter must issue its certificate to practice as an assistant pharmacist. She is a sister of Congressman White, and her victory is pleasing to the ladies at large.

THE first meeting of the State Board of Equalization was held in Frankfort, on the 10th. The Board was created by an act of the last Legislature, the members of which are appointed by the Governor, and compose one from each Congressional District. The duty of the Board is to equalize the valuation of property in the State for taxation after the Assessors have sent their books to the State Auditor. The Board elected Hon. W. V. Prather, of Cynthiana; Major J. A. Grant and Colonel Jacob Corbett as Secretaries. Each member of the board and each of the Secretaries receive five dollars per day while they are in session.

J. T. ALDEN, a venerable citizen of Covington, took an overdose of ammonia. He has been very ill for the past two or three weeks, and the other morning he arose from his bed for the purpose of taking some medicine, and managed to get hold of the bottle containing some ammonia, and swallowed several spoonfuls of it. He then drank a lot of water on top of it, and the result is that his mouth and internal parts are badly swollen, and fears are entertained for his recovery.

G. T. HELM, Marshal of Junction City, who shot Beauregard Carrier, recently, thinking he was one of the Hamner party of murderers, has been acquitted by Judge G. F. Lee, before whom he was tried as an examining Court. J. D. JOHNSON, well known through his connection with Louisville and Cincinnati papers, died at the former place, the other day, of consumption. MR. JOHN MCBREEN, while standing in the second story of the glass-works in Covington the other day, discovered a young boy struggling for life in the Ohio River. He jumped from the second-story window and rushed down to the river and saved the little fellow just as he was sinking. Coroner DeGruyter will present him with a silver badge.

DR. J. B. BUTLER, a prominent and wealthy citizen of Louisville, died quite unexpectedly a few nights ago from an acute attack of Bright's disease. He was the father-in-law of Mr. J. J. Barrett, Secretary of the Franklin Insurance Company, and had reached a ripe old age. He was a native of Shelby County.

H. W. ROSE, merchant tailor of Nicholasville, was robbed of $675 the other day. He left his store-room thinking that his clerks were in charge, and before he or his clerks returned a few minutes later, the thief relieved the money drawer of its contents. It was a slick job, executed with neatness and dispatch.

GEORGE DAWSON stabbed and instantly killed Owen Nuckols, near Louisville, a few days since. Whisky caused the difficulty.

AT Bardstown, George Hughes, a hotel clerk, was fatally cut by William Doane, a drunken negro, who had been ordered from the premises by Hughes. The negro was promptly arrested.

JOHN FOX, white, engaged in unloading coal in the yards of the Kentucky Central Railroad, at Maysville, the other day, was run into by a freight engine. Result, a broken leg and internal injuries.

THE DAIRY.

—The whey or buttermilk should be utilized before an excess of acid has consumed the better portion of it, as it invariably does when stored in large quantities.

—Nothing should be given a milch cow that, so far as quality is concerned, we would not be willing to eat and drink ourselves. Pastures should be free from weeds, brush and rank grasses also from bitter herbs and low-growing deciduous and evergreen trees.

—There is no place on the farm where leaks are more liable to occur than in the dairy, and they creep in surreptitiously. It may be in the feed, through carelessness in handling the milk, or as is too often the case, in keeping unprofitable cows. If ever eternal vigilance was absolutely necessary, it is in conducting a dairy farm.

—The great flow of milk of cows is truly artificial. In a state of nature the cow gives only the necessary quantity, and gives it only the necessary time to sustain the calf. The greater and longer yield of milk is the result of better feeding, better treatment and longer manipulation of the teats. Hence, to increase the yield of milk, feed and milk well.

—There is no need of bothering about a cow's pulse to find out if she is well or not; simply look at her nose. If well, it will be moist and cold; if feverish, dry and hot. She is like a dog in this respect. A staring coat or a hollow eye are also points indicating trouble, and as symptoms of disease they are more to be dreaded than the dry nose. —American Dairyman.

—The proper way to do where cream that has been skimmed at different times is to be churned, is to thoroughly mix it by stirring several times during twelve hours, keeping it in a temperature of sixty degrees, and it should not stand longer that that if the temperature is lower, and less if the temperature is higher.

—We have often urged the necessity of shade in the pasture, and hope farmers all through the treeless West will lose no time in planting trees. A number of varieties are quick growers and will be found profitable. An exchange speaking about this matter says: The eagerness with which shade is sought by sheep and cattle in hot weather ought to lead to the planting of some trees in each pasture. Where there is no shade at present, rapid growers like the silver maple, or any of the broad growing poplars, would be best. In moist soil, the elm is almost unequaled as a quick growing shade tree.—Elgin Advocate.

Measurement of Milk.

If the tests of noted cows were made known in quarts instead of pounds, the experiments would be more easily understood. It may be supposed that every farmer knows how many pounds of milk are contained in a gallon, but the common custom of measuring with the liquid system is not easily usurped, and we may safely assert that there are hundreds of farmers who read of the yields of cows, given as so many pounds of milk, and yet do not feel competent to state what that quantity should be in liquid measure. The method of weighing by the scales also misleads, as the quantity is usually seemingly larger than that from good dairy cows; but give the record in quarts, and every farmer understands the quantity at once.

Milk does not weigh the same under all conditions. A gallon of new milk should weigh eight pounds and eight ounces, or two pounds and two ounces per quart. It requires a pencil and paper for the farmer to reduce a certain number of pounds to the more familiar quarts, owing to the weight of a quart exceeding two pounds, and with a fraction to contend against. Again, skimmed milk weighs an ounce more to the gallon, or eight pounds and nine ounces, while cream weighs only eight pounds and four ounces. Buttermilk, however, weighs eight pounds and eight and a half ounces, and the fraction in that case is a bother. Few farmers read milk records closely when pounds are given, for they do not wish too much arithmetic in simple statements, although the weight system may be preferable at times; but give the production in quarts, and greater interest will be created in the tests, for the easier and more thoroughly understood the experiments, the better for those who make them and for those who are indirectly interested.—The Farm, Field and Fireside.

Washing Butter.

"There is a stage in the churning process at which it is comparatively easy to remove the buttermilk and all it contains. When the butter is yet in a granulated form, the churning may be stopped, and the butter washed with cold water and brine. Advantage is taken, at this stage, of the different specific gravity of the several parts of the whole mixture. The butter is lighter than the water; the caseine, etc., is mostly heavier than the water. After agitation the butter rises to the top of the water, and the other solid matter remains mixed with the water, with a tendency to fall to the bottom. By drawing off the buttermilk, or water, from the bottom, the solid matter foreign to butter is more or less carried away with it. Two or three repetitions of the process complete the separation, sufficiently at least for practical purposes. Advantage may be taken, also, of the difference between the size of the granulated butter and of the solid matter in the buttermilk. The granulated butter being of the size of peas, or grains of wheat, or even pin heads, and smaller, will not pass through holes, or, in other words, a strainer, that will allow the other solid matter, which is too small to be visible to the naked eye, to pass through it."—Indiana Farmer.

—A remarkable case of change of color is exciting the medical men of Santa Barbara, Cal. Four years ago a man named Pina was of very dark complexion. White blotches began to appear on his skin, and now he is as white as any man, save on part of his face and hands.—San Francisco Call.

THE Emperor of China recently authorized the destruction of $4,000,000 worth of opium, and emphatically refuses to accept any revenue from the odious traffic.

THE modern bank robber does not use a "jimmy." It would be foolish for him to run the risk of doing so when he has the safe combination and the manipulation of the books.

VERMONT has a law prohibiting school-teachers from using tobacco in any form, although it is surmised that one of them would not be sent to the penitentiary should he pack away a little old cut-and-dry with his winter clothing to keep away moths.

OF ninety-six railroads in the State of New York only fifteen paid dividends in 1883. The total capital stock of the railroads is $628,718,596, and the total amount of dividends paid was, $15,074,114, or about two per cent. of the capital. Farm property presents a favorable contrast to such a showing.

THE LEGISLATURE OF Massachusetts passed a bill in its closing days adding $150 to the salary of each member, thus making a grab of about $43,000. Governor Robinson promptly vetoed the bill and both branches of the Legislature quite as promptly passed it over his head by a decisive majority.

GERMAN engineers are now engaged in removing the foundations of an old bridge built by Charlemagne in the eighth century. We are authorized to announce of Harrison county, as a candidate for Judge of the Superior Court, from the 3rd Superior Court district, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Reid. Subject to the action of the Democratic party.

J. Q. WARD,

We are authorized to announce

DR. JAMES S. BROWN,

of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23d Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

MR. ARTHUR is out junketing.

SEVERAL new booms have been started since the publication of Tilden's letter.

THE Democratic National ticket's head should be in the east and its tail in the west.

IT took one week and 176 ballots to nominate a candidate for Appellate Judge in the eastern district.

W. C. OWENS has published a card in which he declines to become a candidate for Congress from the seventh district.

MORE rain has fallen to date this month than has fallen in the entire month of June for the past thirty-four years.

THE Democrats of Owen county endorse O. B. Hallam for Superior Judge in a set of highly complimentary resolutions.

THE John Kelley party in New York city are not for Cleveland. According to their standard he is not a thoroughbred Democrat.

THANKS to Hon. L. C. Norman for a copy of the Yeoman Suplement containing a synopsis of the laws passed by the last Legislature.

SOME Ohio parties came over to Bromley Sunday, got drunk and engaged in a cutting scrape which resulted fatally. It was the termination of an old grudge.

IT seems pretty well settled that New York and Indiana will furnish the material for the Democratic National ticket. New York will probably get the first place.

MR. BLAINE can console himself by remembering that what some fellows say against a candidate the better it is for him, unless these scolding fellows get too numerous.

WATTERSON gave the McDonald boom a strong shove again last week. If writing a man into the White House were possible, we would bet on Watterson's favorite every time.

IT is not generally known that the last session of the Legislature was shorter than that of either of its last two predecessors, but it is a fact, and it passed more bills than either of them.

TILDEN'S declining to accept the Democratic nomination if tendered him creates as much dissatisfaction in the Democratic party as the nomination of Blaine does in the Republican party.

THE jury before which T. C. Campbell, of Cincinnati, was tried on the charge of bribing a juror in the Berner trial failed to agree, standing five to seven in favor of conviction. The trial consumed just one week.

STARVATION is knocking at Gen. Grant's door. The poor man has an income of $34,000 per annum, which will hardly keep him out of the poor-house, as he knows nothing about husbanding his limited means.

LAST week the RECORDER took occasion to indicated to Mr. Tilden that he ought to say that he would or would not accept the nomination for President, and the next day he published his letter declining to accept.

TWICE has Uncle Sam Tilden told the Democratic party that his physical condition is not such as to allow him to make a canvass for the office of President, and still many will be found who will want to nominate him notwithstanding what the old man has said on the subject.

THE law prohibiting the sale or circulation of such publications as the Police Gazette and the Police News is now in force in this State, but it seems that the news dealers are not aware of the fact or intend to ignore the law.

MR. J. Q. WARD, of Cynthiana, and candidate for Superior Judge made this county a visit last week in the interest of his canvass. He made a good impression and nearly all of those whom he met became almost enthuastic in his behalf.

THE Senate has got into deep financial water, and is floundering around under the weight of several extraordinary pension bills. Senator Sherman announces that he will not support the bill to which the National Republican Convention pledged itself.

J. J. ORR, chairman of this Superior Court district has called a meeting of the chairmen of the several county committees to meet in Lexington on the 26th inst., for the purpose of making arrangements for disposing of the candidates if they deem it necessary to make a party nomination for the office.

So far as we can learn very little interest was taken in the election of school trustees in this county. The education of the young is a matter in which all are interested, and should create more interest among the people than anyother, and good men should have been elected trustees in every school district.

GUESS Judge Hargis has found by this time that he does not carry eastern Kentucky in his pocket when it comes to saying who shall and who shall not hold the offices. Hargis is a political trickster, who has been meddling in politics when his duties as Judge of the highest court in the State demanded his time and labor, and it is a good thing he has to step down and out, for his conduct since being installed is a disgrace to the Judiciary of the State.

THE Boston Globe says: Mr. Blaine is a strong candidate, and is only rivalled in energy, magnetism and the affection of the people by General Butler, who, in these respects, is at the head of all living Americans. But in addition General Butler, in intellect and ability, is one of the few men of American history whom posperity will continue to honor.

There are other good and strong leaders in the Democratic party, but not one so dear to the hearts of the people as General Butler.

MR. TILDEN'S declining to accept the nomination for the presidency opens the field to all those in the Democratic party who have aspirations in that direction. So long as he was silent as to his intentions, none of the other aspirants cut any figure before the public so great was the unanimity with which his nomination was desired. Mr. Tilden's feeble physical condition induced him to refuse the nomination which was coming to him by acclamation, and which would have created an enthusiasm in the party never before witnessed. With him at the head of the Democratic ticket the Republican ticket was almost certain of defeat, and that party are much releaved since he has declared that he will not accept the nomination.

THE long tobacco season last week and the abundance of plants that were ready for transplanting afforded the farmers a splendid opportunity for putting out the large crops they anticipated planting, and there is now a tremendous acreage of tobacco planted in this county. Many persons are not entirely done planting, but no one fell short but a very small quantity of ground, and with one of those seasons that require close attention to the growing crop, every man, woman and child in the county can find employment in the tobacco field. But it is to be hoped that no such season will prevail.

The planting of such a very large acreage of tobacco does not signify that the crop will be correspondingly large, for the crop is running the gauntlet from the time it is planted till it is sold. Heavy rains, hail storms and frosts sometimes diminishe the crop in a few short moments and the producer has to take his chances with these three out door destroyers, and works in dread of them all the season. Should one or all of these catch the growing tobacco this season, owing to the large crop planted, the loss will be exceedingly great.

If the crop th[illegible] the tobacco territory in this country proves to be as large in each particular locality as it is in this, and it is successfully matured, the price next season will certainly be reduced to such an extent that many persons will be necessarily compelled to abandon its production, which will be a blessing to much of the land in the country.

THE Court of Appeals has affirmed the judgment of the lower court in which the negro Bush was sentenced to be hanged for the murder of a Miss Vanmeater in Fayette county. The case has been reversed three times, and it is to be hoped that justice will at last be allowed to take its course.

THE Republican subscribers to Harper's Weekly, at Dayton, Ohio, indignant at the political course of the editor, are stopping their subscriptions, one large newsdealer stating that every subscriber except one had ordered the paper stopped. A number of subscribers to the Weekly from Mt. Vernon, Ohio, who are Republicans, have sent a letter to the publishers protesting against their assaults on Blaine.

Local News.

Let the pretty weather continue.

We have no late news from the Aurora oil fields.

F. P. Walton has bought another tobacco screw.

The justices of the peace hold their courts this month.

Measles of a very mild type have appeared in Bullington.

Palmer is the boss hand on repairing all kinds of machinery.

Too much rain this month for the good of the tobacco crop.

F. P. Walton holds the reins over the fasttest double team in town.

Uncle Ben Rouse claims to have the first corn to tassel hereabouts.

The Central Hotel corner is partaking of its appearance in days of yore.

The weather seems to be warming up now for the summer's campaign.

Mrs. J. M. Riddell, of Williamstown, is visiting her daughter at this place.

David Blythe is home from Hanover, Indiana, college spending the vacation.

So much rain is calculated to impair the quality of honey made this season.

The spring lambs will begin to leave the county in large numbers in a few days.

J. A. Riddell was presented with a fine imported bridle by Joe Turner, one day last week.

The army of English sparrows receives large reenforcements every week. They propagate rapidly.

A wet June spoils the wheat crop. Therefore dry weather should prevail the balance of the month.

A considerable slice of James Jone's tobacco patch went down Gunpowder last Friday afternoon.

If you want your old mowing machines repaired and put in apple-pie order, take them to Palmer.

Palmer says bring in your mowers and reapers now, so as to avoid the rush and give him time to do them justice.

FOR SALE—All of our gardening implements, consisting of &c., &c., &c., and other articles too numerous to mention.

A very heavy rain fell in this section Friday afternoon and almost ruined crops on hill sides, washing the land very badly.

This (Wednesday) morning Dr. Bange goes to Newport to deliver a lecture before the Arion Mænnerchore Society of that place.

Harry Blythe and Charles Hughes attended the picnic at Parlor Grove, last Wednesday, given by William Penn Lodge I. O. O. F.

Mr. Owen Minor, an aged citizen is quite sick, having had at first a stroke of apoplexy, after which came an attack of erysipelas.

Palmer can take your old machine that chokes in heavy or fine grass, dress the gards and make them cut good as a new one.

We didn't catch any fish, but we saw water enough to support a "herd" of whales all summer. We grew very tired of seeing it, too.

The cattle market opened up lively Saturday morning. There were some nice stock in the pen, and Jim Conner had the market all his way.

Gabe Haskins now pineth in durence vile in default of $200 bail for shooting another negro, an account of which was given in these columns last week.

The weather last Saturday was not very propitious for dedicating La Grace Grove, but nevertheless the attendance was good, and all enjoyed the occasion.

The early Gardner gets the first peas and beans. That aint us: No, it aint us, nor it aint Early Gardner, in this community, but it is Charley Gardner.

Professor Newton's school at Walton closed with a very interesting entertainment last Friday afternoon. The professor is a very popular teacher, and has a large school.

Mack Aylor and family were visiting their relatives in this vicinity last Saturday and Sunday. Mack will soon become Hoosierized, and we are glad to learn that he is doing well.

Last Wednesday evening Mr. M. T. Graves and wife entertained Hon. J. Q. Ward, and several of their neighbors. An excellent supper was spread, and a jolly good time had by all.

A fly which deposits its egg near the first joint in a stalk has nearly ruined a large field of wheat for Thomas Willis. The egg hatches a worm which cuts the stalk off at the joint.

Prof. Tucker passed through here Monday but did not think he would be justified in stopping and giving an entertainment. The Professor has a good show and deserves a liberal patronage.

The next man who says anything to us about going fishing Friday afternoon, will wake up strongly impressed that a ton of dynamite exploded within his immediate vicinity. Do you catch on?

Joe Minor attempted to swim Woolper last Friday while it was on the rampage, but the current was too strong for him, and after being carried under two or three times he abandoned the undertaking.

The Sheriff will be ready to commence collecting taxes as soon as he receives his instructions from the Auditor in regard to increasing or decreasing the assessments in this county as the case may be.

When you go fishing don't go on the tother side of the creek, for when it rains with you over there it never lets up till you are water bound. Such was the experience of Dr. Bange and the writer, last Friday.

Oh, how pleasant it is to sit on the bank of the rampant Gunpowder and watch it slow recede to proportions admitting a weary and hungry fisherman to cross in safety! You bet it's nice, aint it, Bange?

Of course if the office of County Superintendent of schools comes to the present commissioner he will not refuse it; but it is not likely that he wants it bad enough to canvass the county to secure his election.

A large crowd of the lads and lassies, and maids and batchelors of the town assembled at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Palmer, Monday evening, where they enjoyed a flow of music, vocal and instrumental.

It being leap year gives the young man the privilege of making the rag carpet, and judging from the number of old clothes one of our young citizens is hoarding, he intends taking advantage of the privilege.

William Allen and Warren Meeks were ordained deacons of the Dry Creek Baptist church, last week. Rev. Jas. A. Kirtley preached the ordination sermon, and Rev. W. H. Felix delivered the charge to the deacons.

J. M. Moody, of Bellevue, has a turkey hen that has for the past month performed the remarkable feat of laying two eggs a day. She is the only turkey hen in the vicinity, and it is certainly a terrible strain on her.

The Baptist and Christian denominations at Walton combined and gave a festival last Saturday evening, the proceeds of which were donated to the Methodist congregation to assist it in building a church edifice at that place.

The day has come when to leave the grave of the departed one unmarked by a neat stone, is not suffered by even those in the most ordinary walks of life, and all can be pleased in both design and price by Huschart & Co., of Lawrenceburg, Ind. John Beall, of Hebron is their agent.

Stopping at Gainsville a few minutes last Thursday we met Fred Pulzgraf, the good natured carriage and wagon maker, James Gaines and Perry Kirtley. Gaines was measuring calicoes and weighing out sugar and coffee for Kirtley, who was giving the store a thorough painting, which will add much to both the internal and external appearance of the building.

In the midst of life we prepare for the grim destroyer, and for that purpose a proposition is afloat to buy six acres of F. Riddell's land immediately east of the town and convert it into a cemetery, to be under the control of a stock company. It is a very nice location for a city of the dead, and as the cemetery is now about entirely taken, some arrangements for providing a place for burying the dead is necessary.

Early last Thursday morning a stranger arrived at the Boone House, and in a short time took passage with James Westbay for the city. He appeared to be restless and uneasy, which created a suspicion that he was not exactly the kind of a man he should be. Another strange thing is he gave Ben Dean $3 to bring him to this place form the Aurora ferry, when he could have gone from there to the city for half the money and in much less than half the time it took to come here.

W. T. Smith was at Bondurant's mill Friday when that young deluge came, and no sooner than it ceased to come down by the barrel he became demoralized and started for Burlington under the lash, rivelling the record of Tenbroek. He crossed Gunpowder without any trouble, but had to flank all the little ravines, which caused him to strike the East Bend road several miles out of town. He don't go to mill now, if a cloud can be seen in the sky.

The news of the Republican convention, with nomination, was printed by the INDEPENDENT in ten minutes after the nomination was made, and in the hands of our patrons shortly afterward, probably the first newspaper that had it in print in so short a time.—Warsaw Independent.

The Independent is a first-class, live local paper, and it is a hustler when it comes to publishing the proceedings of conventions. For instance: the Independent published the result of the Winchester convention three days before the nomination was made, and had it correct.

Judge L. L. Youell died at the residence of his son in Walton last Friday, after several weeks illness, which seemed to be the breaking up of the physical man, superinduced by old age and bodily infirmity of long standing. Judge Youell was the first Judge of the Boone County Court under the present constitution, an office which he filled to the satisfaction of the public and honor to himself. He had been in a feeble condition for several years, having never recovered from a paralytic stroke received long since; and had it not been for his indominable energy he would have given up labor long since, but so long as he was able to be about he applied himself assiduously to his law practice, and not for some time after his physical condition was on the verge of complete exhaustion did he surrender, and in a few weeks thereafter he was summoned to appear before that bar that knows no laws as frail as those in this small, sinful world. Requiescat in pace.

The demand for the better grades of leaf and colory lugs continue active, at prices current last week. There was a better feeling, at a fractional advance, for common lugs and leaf. In all, the prices realized were very unsatisfactory especially [where tobacco was strictly sweet: this kind selling at a decline of 6 to 10 cents from September prices. When sweet the demand and bidding was good, and generally sold.

We have reports from all the tobacco that the contemplated crop is planted with a large increase in acreage.

The celebrated school-house case was argued last Saturday before Esquire Mike Rouse, who withheld his decision, taking the case under advisement, Esq. Wagstaff was objected to.

I have no weddings to record this time, but Cupid is "on the warpath" around here and doing some reckless shooting, and there is no telling when or where his darts will find a vulnerable point.

Prof. Stephenson's school closed last Friday, and with his reputation as a teacher, our comments would seem useless. Suffice it to say that the session has been a success to the patrons and pupils, and we hope that the professor will spend the summer vacation with us, as we deem him a pleasant gentleman.

Hon. Harry Baker has returned from his commission house in New Orleans, where he spends the fall and winter months, and is now the guest of his son-in-law, Dr. Slater. Harry looks well, and reports having a good trade through the winter, the firm doing a heavier business than usual.

Beaver Lick.

Fishing is now the order of the day among our sporting fraternity. Fisherman's luck, however, generally crowns their efforts.

The Republicans of Beaver and Hamilton are proud of the selection their representatives made for president at Chicago. It will carry the strength of the party here.

If somebody would blow his little tin horn in Beaver every Saturday evening, he could sell lots of fish. Beaver needs fish and wonders why she has been neglected among fish mongers.

Beaver is at present supporting two blacksmiths, both getting a good lot of work to do. Competition is the life of trade, and of course, in this instance the farmers are getting the advantage it affords.

Checkers are losing ground every day in Beaver. Our old set of players have all gone out into the country and turned their attention to tobacco culture, which if less amusing is by far more profitable.

The enjoyment of existance amid the beautiful foliage of the limited forests of to day, is indeed of brief duration, sayeth the frisky squirrel as he boundeth from life to death at the boom of the terrible old shot-gun.

Our wool growers have sheared and sold their wool, and looking at the price received, seem inclined to join the howling mob for a restoration of war tariff on this valuable commodity. The price you know is very low.

Rev. W. S. Keene closed quite an interesting meeting here recently with four additions to the church. He is an able and fluent christian minister, and is not afraid to touch jarringly upon some of the noted orthodox subjects of the day.

Our farmers are done setting tobacco and are now battling with the weeds in their cornfields. The appearance of the wheat fields around here indicate an abundant yield. Timothy and clover that were sown last spring look promisingly well.

We hear great complaint coming from the farmers about the white top in their meadows, and white clover in their blue grass pastures. They should remember that a wet season is not conducive alone to good vegetation, but the vile as well.

None of our boys attended Latonia's brilliant spring opening. Upon a few minutes reflection one can see this is not a time in the year when farmer's boys pockets are overly burdened with filthy lucre, hence a circus would not live to the patriarchical age of Methuselah in Beaver.

The effects of the flood are plainly visible in Constance, the lumber yard at the mill being in a terribly demoralized condition yet. While there last week we noticed several new buildings are being erected, and the town seems to be enjoying a healthy boom. The County Surveyor, J. W. Davis and the writer were running a road division, and some of the lines are not perpendicular, and another feature in the work was having to climb trees to find corners. At noon the party enjoyed a good dinner which Mrs. George Anderson prepared for it.

A SUMMER EVENING.

'Twas a summer evening cool and charming;
Every seat upon the common held its blissful twain.
Boomed the beetles by them quite alarming,
And the foliage rustled like the dropping of the rain.

Perfumes from the beds of roses rising
Woke ecstatic raptures from the rose lips of the fair.
That soft hands were pressed is not surprising,
Nor that waists were clasped and kisses stolen unaware!

I, too, sat with Mary 'neath the awning
While the sickle moon with Venus gemmed the golden West,
And I felt the tender passion dawning
Like a moon-rise o'er the heaving ocean of my breast.

"Dearest Mary, wilt thou be my star, pet?
Yes, 'tis thou alone on earth, 'tis thou whom I adore!
When we're married, Mary, not a carpet
Need we have upon the lovely inlaid wooden floor!"

Ah, how confidentially we whispered,
Cheek to cheek, while melancholy toads chirped in the trees,
And our mothers not the slightest lisp heard,
As they sat within the parlor talking charities.

Many years are garnered since we planned it
That our house should have no carpet on the inlaid floor;
Gentle reader, canst thou understand it?
I was six, then—and my neighbor, Mary, she was four!

BRUIN IN THE WAY.

An Old Stage-Driver's Story.

"Well, the' is another yarn I thought on last night, after you'd ben a-pestering of me for stories; it's a curious matter, and I've larfed over it more times!

"Up to Peddle's—he kep' tavern over by the Falls, and I generally made out to stop there over Sundays, because that Emeline, she that's Mis' Tinker now, was hired help there then.

"Well, as I was sayin', up to Peddle's there was a houseful of comp'ny one year. Not the real rich folks, such as stayed to the Glen and Crawford's, but middlin' folks as to money; respectable and learn'd, most of 'em, and as tickled about the mountings and bushes and things as though they was in forrin parts, or as I might be in Boston or York, ef ever I was to go to them places.

"One that made it home there for the hull summer was a young woman from the East, Salem, I guess, or down to salt somewheres in that region; an odd piece as ever you see, she was.

"There's more of 'em now; I see 'em every year a-strammin' round the lots and roads, with short gowns, big thick boots, flappin' bunnets, and long sticks into their hands. 'Strong-minded,' some folks call 'em, but they act more as though they was strong-bodied to my mind.

"But she, this Theodoshy Wickes, she was the first ever come into th s parts, and I tell you folks stared at her a sight. They done more gawpin' at her over to Monroe than ef she was a ghost.

"She used to set off of a mornin' before breakfast, with that there blue gown comin' to her boot-tops, not a mite further, and sech boots!

"I could have wore 'em, as fur as thickness went, the hull of a New Hampshire winter; but they would have been considerable of a pinch for me; her bunnet fetched across with a blue ribbin, and a peeled saplin', full an inch through, for a cane; and she'd be atop of Bear Hill and back before Peddle'd ring the bell for wakin' his boarders up.

"I'm bound to say she was a real good-lookin' girl; big eyes, as blue as them gentian-blows we have up here 'long in the fall, and the crinkliest kind of yaller-brown hair, and real smooth-skinned, with the pink a-comin' and goin' in her face like everything; and she did have the best soundin' voice and larf I ever heerd in my life.

"Why, 'twas like a pebbly brook and a bob'link mixed in ekal parts, as the doctors say. Folks did speak disrespectful of her nose an' mouth sometimes, said 't one turned up an' t'other was big; but to my mind noses aint of much account in a face any way, and her's just give a sort of independent look to her, same as the turn-up of a snapper-blossom makes it sassy-lookin'; and I don't know as a mouth is too big that has fresh red lips a-openin' to show teeth jist like rows of young corn on a cob, white and shinin'.

"I thought she was han'some, and so did some other folks to Peddle's. There was one young feller there, off and on, all that summer; he came from down to York, and they said he was as rich as mud, and I guess he was, though he didn't put on no graces on account of it. He come first with a couple of girls and an old lady; aunt and cousins to him they was; real city folks, rigged oft in silks an' satins an' thin clothes, that left samples onto every bush they come nigh, and the sort that had to have a man help 'em over every stone and lift 'em acrost two-rail fences, and scare the oldest cow out of sight before they'd stop screamin'. Talk about turn-up noses! I tell you, their'n a'most went over backward when they see Miss Wickes goin' on as she used to.

" 'That dreadful girl!' Miss Bell always called her; and 'madam,' she said; —'

" 'Charles, dear! who is that extremely objectionable young person?' "

Old Tinker gave such an exact fashionable drawl as he imitated the New York lady that I laid down my knitting to laugh. He looked at me with his keen eyes, and fairly grinned from ear to ear.

"Well, now, she did! I like to have laughed out myself when I heerd her. But 'twas fun to hear 'em all go on. The young feller didn't say a word; he saw them blue eyes an' crinkly hair an' red lips, now I tell ye! and he didn't see nothin' else.

"But it kind of give him a fillip nevertheless, to have them scornin' of her; there's nothin' to a young man—nor to a young woman, for that matter—like a leetle hullsome opposition.

"Human natur' is contrary, however, you 'count for it; an' the more they faulted her, why, the more notice he took of her. She was alone, ye see; and if a man's got any right spunk into him, he feels as though he had a call to defend any woman, old or young, that haint got nobody to look out for 'em.

"But she was the queerest! She never seemed to know the' was a man round, onless 'twas some hobblin' old feller that nobody else would look at, or some of them poor ministers with sick wives that used to come round in a one-horse shay and get took in at half-price.

"To sech folks, and to th' old women that was widders or maiden-ladies, she was as sweet as maple-sugar; a-fetchin' in wild-blows to 'em, and leetle bunches of berries and sech.

"But she didn't seem to care no more for the young fellers than if they was balsam sprouts; she'd go over a fence as spryest I ever see; and cows! why, she was friends with the biggest part of 'em in the lots around.

"She was awful independent; 'twa'n't no use for a young man to step up an' say: 'Allow me to help you over them stones;' she'd be over 'em before he got through sayin', and turn round with a 'Thank you!' cold enough to freeze cream.

"They didn't like it; 'taint natur for a woman to be so thistly and never need no help from men.

"But she didn't care; they was all alike to her, apparently. I mistrusted from what I see Sundays that she had a better opinion of Charley Norton, the feller from York, than of any of t'other s: I'd learned wimmen folkses ways.

"Well, the aunt an' cousins put back to York. They couldn't stand such a woodsy country; nor such folks, I guess; but he stayed.

"I got an idee of what was the matter, for Emeline told how she heerd old Miss Gage a-sayin' one evenin' when the' wa'n't but them two to the teatable, that Mr. Norton was a great catch, he was so rich; and Miss Theodoshy she tossed her saucy head up, Emeline said, just as scornful, and says, says she: 'That 's the best reason for refusing his acquaintance; no decent girl would marry a man for his money.'

"She got a old hoss that had some go, and she rid about the roads fur and near; all alone, mind ye, as bumptious as a bumble-bee; and he'd see by and watch her jump off, all rosy and fresh, never lettin' nobody lift a hand to help her, but jost as capable as though there wa'n't never a man made.

"Now accordin' to my idees this kind of bold independence is not just womanly, nor accordin' to nature.

"Well, most things has an end when they get to it. 'Twas gettin' well on into September, and the folks was goin' off to milder climes, as the hymn book says. He and she and two old creturs from down the country, one on 'em stone-deaf—that was Mis' Blake—an' t'other dead-lame—that was Mister Blake—was all that was left. About the tenth, there came, real ontimely, the biggest frost I ever see; friz up the roads just like iron, and it didn't thaw skerce any in the sun. I came down to Peddle's with an empty stage one day, and lo you! I see every one ready to go, them four that I spoke about.

"Miss Theodoshy she'd always ride onto the top of the stage when she could, so now she come out, bundled up in a stout jacket and a little warm bunnet, and I fixed the board for her, and up she climbed, the old folks havin' got inside; but she hadn't more'n settled herself before out come Norton, and up he went by wheel an' foot-board, for I'd took the plank away.

"She looked jest as cool as the weather, I tell ye; but he didn't care and I didn't neither, so I driv along.

"I had a mighty team that day, and a light load. How them horses did travel! We hed to go through a long piece of woods, about ten mile; they're pretty well cut off now, and there's a railroad alongside the old road for a spell, but then the' wa'n't a house nor hut all the way.

"We'd got well along when I heered something like a hound a way off, 'twas one, I had reason to suppose, for I knowed there was a hound out on the scout for himself thereabouts, and had been all summer.

"Well, I didn't pay no great attention to 't, but all of a suddin my leaders give a shy and faced round, the way I spoke of; they see or smelt somethin' I didn't, and while I was pursuadin' of 'em with my whip there was a great crash in the bushes jest ahead, and down into the road, full-tilt, came two of the biggest black bears I ever see.

"You'd ought to ha' seen them hosses rare up! The bears wan't after them though; they'd heered the hound as plain as I had, and they didn't know but what they was hunted, so they pulled foot for their place o' residence, that I found a spell after in a pile of rocks five mile below; for you see I was always foul on bears, and if I see one, I had to go for it whether or no, so after stagin' was over I hunted them two out.

"But what to do now, pestered me a little: I hadn't no gun, and 'twas teetotally impossible to turn round in that narrer road with a four-hoss stage betwixt a high bank, and a deep brook that run five feet below the road.

"And them hosses did act! the bears went on runnin', but the hosses jumped, an' rared an' sidled, and I see there wasn't but one thing to do, and that was to go ahead; so I fell to with the whip.

"I larfed right out out. I never hunted bears that way before; there was the old woman inside a screamin' like three loons; seems she'd stuck her head out in the first on 't and see the bears; and the old man was usin' considerable tongue himself in the way of words, and a knockin' on the roof with his crutch for to call my attention, but I couldn't tend to him, I had the hosses to tune.

"We went along pretty well, I tell ye; them critters was about as 'fraid of my whip as they was of the bears, and finally they seemed to see that the beasts was runnin' away from 'em, and they settled down to a good run, and the bears went lopin' along like calves, up an' down, down an' up, making good time though, for they can run come to a level, a pretty good jog.

"All this time the two behind me was mortal still, and I had to keep my eye on the hosses so I hadn't looked round, but when I could stop laughin' I did, and what do you think? That girl had fainted dead away, and he was watchin' over her.

"Seems she see the bears when they come down the bank, and they was comin' right at us, and it skeert her to death, as you may say.

"I hadn't no time to say much, I jest spoke up:

" 'You keep tight holt, young feller; hunt's most up,' and then I larfed, for after all she wan't nothin' but a woman, and he see it, too.

"I tell you it done him good! he see the etarnal principle o' things wan't played out in her hand anyway; she'd have to give in now, that a woman can't always go it alone; specially a bear-huntin' with a stage an' four hosses! A man's good for somethin', and she'd owned it up onmeaningly, as you may say.

"Well, it seemed quite awhile, but it wan't more'n fifteen or twenty minutes before them bears struck off into a alder swamp, the road havin' crossed the brook just before, and we saw no more of 'em; but it seemed as though the hosses never would stop in the created world; they got a-goin', and wo fetched into Lower Bartlett way ahead of time; but it took the extry hour to rub 'em off and cool 'em down, and to get her out o' that faint, and rested up a bit.

"But the upshot of it all was that them two come to Peddle's agin next summer, married, if I must say it, jest as sure as you live; though I didn't set out to tell a romance, but to show that there are some idees of independence that people sometimes praise in a young person that won't always stand; and when I see him I kind of winked my eye at him, mild, and sez I:

" 'It all came of bear-huntin'.' And he larfed right out. Now, I dislike a forward girl, but I am always suspicious of one who affects to be so independent that she scorns to receive help from anybody; and it commonly ends in this sort of way." —Rose Terry Cooke, in Youth's Companion.

Hindoo Devotees.

Some of these tortures consist in having the tongue bored with a red-hot iron, and this was at one time a self-torture so popular that under a clump of banyan-trees near the temple of the bull-god at Chinsurah the devotees used to range themselves in a long line in order to get the operation performed by a blacksmith, who bore the reputation of not only doing it effectually, which was well, but also—what was equally important among the poverty-stricken Fakirs—cheaply. To walk with parched peas in your shoes was in the days of severe pennance, held to be a most reputable punishment for sins divers and many. But the Hindoo Fakir quite outstrips the European one. A case is on record and it is doubtless only a specimen of many—of a Fakir (a Mohammedan in this case, I believe), who walked up and down in front of a mosque gaily chanting a hymn, with his sandals nailed to his feet with iron spikes, which projected above the instep. Others will make the pilgrimage to a shrine, not on foot, but by rolling their bodies along the road the whole of the way, by advancing on their backs pushing themselves along by their heels, on their hands and feet, and by various other equally inconvenient means of progression. Others will sit motionless in one place until the joints of their limbs get so stiff that they cannot bend them, or with hands clenched until the nails grow through the flesh, or by holding the arm by means of support in such a position that in time it withers. There is really no end to the ingenuity of these devotees in inflicting long and lasting tortures on themselves without precipitating death, which would be a pleasure in comparison, and hence not so meritorious in the eyes of the gods. Another method of torture—which must be well known to my readers by means of the illustrations of it, which are stock figures in missionary publications—is that in which hooks are inserted in muscles of the devotees' backs and then a number of them are swung in an apparatus not unlike the "merry-go-round" seen at English fairs, only in this case the sole support by which the victim is suspended in mid-air is the hook and cord inserted in his living flesh. If a person wishes to reap the benefits that the gods are supposed to shower on the meritorious people who practice this species of torture he has no difficulty in procuring a substitute who will submit to it for a small sum, though self-torture is now prohibited by the British authorities.—Peoples of the World.

How Fortune Comes.

Years will often elapse before a doctor gets any return for the money which his friends invested in obtaining his diploma. On the other hand, a single fortunate case may bring patients by the score. About twenty years ago, a young doctor who had been established three years in London without making an income, lost heart, and determined to emigrate to Australia. He sold his small house and furniture, paid his passage money, and a week before his ship was to sail, went into the country to say good-bye to his parents. Having to change trains at a junction, he was waiting on the platform, when a groom in a smart livery galloped up to the station, and, calling excitedly to a porter, handed him a telegraphic message for transmission. From some remarks exchanged between the two men, the young doctor understood that the Duke of ——, a member of the Cabinet, had fallen dangerously ill, and that an eminent physician in London was being telegraphed for. The groom added that he had ridden to the houses of three local doctors, who had all been absent, and that "her Grace was in a terrible way." The young doctor saw his opportunity, and at once seized it. "I am a medical man," he said to the groom, "and I will go to the hall to offer my assistance till another doctor arrives." The groom was evidently attached to his master, for he said: "Jump on my horse, sir, and ride straight down the road for about four miles; you can't miss the hall; any one will tell you where it is." The doctor went, was gratefully received by the Duchess, and happened to be just in time to stop a mistake in treatment of the patient which might have proved fatal if continued for a few hours longer. The Duke was suffering from typhoid fever; and when the eminent physician arrived from town he declared that the young doctor's management of the case had been perfect. The result of this was that the latter was requested to remain at the hall to take charge of the patient, and his name figured on the bulletins which were issued during the next fortnight, and were printed in all the daily newspapers of the kingdom. Such an advertisement is always the making of a medical man, especially when his patient recovers, as the Duke did. Our peuniless friend received a fee of 500 guineas; took a house at the West End, and from that time to this has been at the head of one of the largest practices in London.—Chambers' Journal.

Wanted to Pool.

Yesterday noon there were about twenty people in line at the general delivery window of the Post-office, when a woman undertook to crowd into a place nearer the head.

"Madam," observed the man she would have crowded down the line, "this window is run on the principle of a barber shop—first come first served."

"Yes, but I am terribly anxious to get a letter," she replied.

"Anybody sick?"

"No. My husband is in Cleveland, and I expect a letter with money in it. If I don't get it I don't know how I'm going to get along over Sunday."

"What a coincidence!" he exclaimed. "My wife is in Buffalo, and I'm expecting money from her. If it doesn't come my landlord will set me outdoors, and I'll have to pawn my coat to raise a stake to play policy! Can't we pool?"

"What do you mean, sir?"

"Why—aha—if your husband won't support you, nor my wife support me, let's chip in and hire the same lawyer to get our divorces. Comes cheaper, you know, where the two jobs are rolled into one."

She flatly refused to join in any such arrangement, and when the clerk answered: "Nothing for you," the hyena of a man grinned and chuckled and said he was glad of it—served her right.—Detroit Free Press.

Mosquitoes Under the Microscope.

We have long held the opinion that the mosquito is an unmitigated scoundrel, who could give our own lively flea six stones and a beating over a long course, but we are now convinced. A gentleman has examined Mr. Mosquito under a microscope, and his description is, to say the least, startling. It appears that in the "bill" of the little beast alone there are no fewer than five distinct surgical instruments. These are described as a lance, two meat saws, a suction pump and a small Corliss steam engine. It appears that when a "skeeter" settles down to his work upon a nice, tender portion of the human frame the lance is first pushed into the flesh, then the two saws, placed back to back, begin to work up and down to enlarge the hole, then the pump is inserted and the victim's blood is siphoned up to the reservoirs carried behind, and finally, to complete the cruelty of the performance, the wretch drops a quantity of poison into the wound to keep it irritated. Then the diminutive fiend takes a fly around just to digest your gore, and makes tracks for a fresh victim, or if the first one has been of unusually good quality he returns to the same happy hunting ground. The mosquito's marvellous energy, combined with his portable operating chest, make him at once a terror and a pest. Our English skin-grazers are doves in comparison with them.—London Sportsman.

Blankets Made of Cow Hair.

"Have you any cow hair to sell?" a wandering buyer asked a tanner in the presence of a reporter, a few days ago. The tanner did have some of the curious commodity asked for, and submitted it to the would-be buyer's scrutiny. The latter critically examined the lot and offered the owner four cents a pound for it.

Wondering what use cow hair could be put to, the reporter sought to satisfy his curiosity by questioning the buyer. "What do I do with it?" replied that individual. "I'll tell you. I first 'blow' the hair by a peculiar process which separates the long hairs from the short ones. The long hairs are then woven into fabrics with other material which, upon completion, becomes the genuine all-wool blankets which Uncle Sam presents to the Indians."

"And the shorter hairs?"

"They are worked into felting."

"Do you ever pay more than four cents a pound for the hair?"

"Oh, yes. White cows' hair is worth eleven cents a pound."—N. Y. Mail and Express.

Big Words.

It is never well to use big words when small ones will express the same meaning. A lady who was making a call on some acquaintance observed that the furniture had been changed, and remarked to the lady: "You have been metamorphosed, haven't you?" "Y-e-s," said the other hesitatingly. "You mean calcimined, I suppose; it looks much better, doesn't it?" "What caused your little boy's sickness?" asked a plain mother of a mother whose little son was very ill. "He was climbing a ladder," said the lady, "and lost his equilibrium." "Poor little fellow," said the sympathetic woman; "do buy him another; he'll be more careful next time!" "Did you find the people indigent?" asked a clergyman of a wealthy member of his church who had been calling on some very poor families. "O, dear, no," answered the lady; "they were respectable, but as poor as poverty."—New York Observer.

—Italian masons, when they begin to build a house, dig a deep pit, into which is put lime enough to fill it within a foot or two of the top. Water is then poured in until the pit is filled, and the mixture is left to itself, care being taken only to add water, as that first put in is evaporated or absorbed. As mortar is wanted, a portion of the lime is taken from the top of the mass, but the lower portion, which will be used to mix with the plastering mortar, remains undisturbed for years, and acquires a smooth, pasty quality much prized by the Italian architects, who place a value upon the lime which they use for such purposes proportionate to the length of time which has elapsed since it was first slaked.

HER SECRET TROUBLES.

The Unknown Trials Which a Woman Endured Without Complaint—Why They Vanished.

Near the close of one of the most trying of the few hot days of the present year a pale, care-worn woman might have been seen at the window of her dwelling apparently in a condition of complete exhaustion. Her efforts to meet the accumulated duties of her household had been great but unsuccessful, while the care of a sick child, whose wails could even then be heard, was added to her otherwise overwhelming troubles. Nature had done much for her and in her youthful days she had been not only beautiful but the possessor of health such as is seldom seen. But home and family duties and the depressing cares which too often accompany them had proven greater than her splendid strength and she felt at that moment not only that life was a burden but that death would be a grand relief. This is no unusual experience. It is, in fact, a most common every-day occurrence, and a great prayer is constantly ascending from thousands of homes for deliverance from the deadly power which is enslaving so many wives, mothers and daughters. And yet these duties of life must be met. No woman can afford to turn aside from the proper care of her home and the ones who are committed to her care, although in doing these duties she may sacrifice her health, and possibly life itself. The experience of one who successfully overcame such trials and yet retained health and all the blessings it brings is thus told by Rev. William Watson, Presiding Elder of the Methodist-Episcopal Church, residing at Watertown, N. Y. He said:

"My wife became completely run down through overwork and care of a sick member of our household, and I entertained serious apprehensions as to her future. She was languid, pale, utterly exhausted, without appetite, and in a complete state of physical decline. And yet she did not, could not neglect her duties. I have seen her about the house, trying courageously to care for the ones she loved when I could tell, from the lines upon her face how much she was suffering. At times she would rally for a day or two and then fall back into the state of nervous exhaustion she felt before. Her head pained her frequently, her body was becoming bowed by pain and all hope or enjoyment in life seemed departed. What to do we could not tell. I resolved, however, to bring back her life and vitality if possible and to this end began to treat her myself. To my great relief her system has been toned up, her strength restored, her health completely recovered and wholly by the use of Warner's Tippecanoe, which I regard as the greatest tonic, invigorator and stomach remedy that has ever been discovered. I was led to use it the more readily as I had tested the health-restoring properties of Warner's Safe Cure in my own person and I therefore knew that any remedy Mr. Warner might produce would be a valuable one. I have since recommended both Warner's Tippecanoe and Warner's Safe Cure to many of my friends and I know several Doctors of Divinity as well as numerous laymen who are using both with great benefit."

If all the overworked and duty driven women of America could know of the experience above described, and act upon the same, there can be little doubt that much of the pain, and most of the depressing influences of life might be avoided. Such truths are too valuable to remain unknown.

CURE OF RHEUMATISM.

NO. 45 FULTON MARKET,
NEW YORK CITY, Jan. 30, 1884.

I have been a martyr to Inflammatory Rheumatism for thirty years. I am a provision dealer in Fulton Market, and the dampness of the place caused my trouble. Standing on the stones, my feet used to swell up almost as big as cushions, then the rheumatism would affect my shoulders and arms. I have tried almost everything, but without avail, until I began using BRANDRETH'S PILLS. The most I ever took was six pills at a dose, and soon as the medicine operated, the pain would begin to pass off. I then took two pills every night for a week, and would be entirely cured for some months, until I had another attack; then the same treatment always cured me. BRANDRETH'S PILLS never have failed me once. I have been using them for upwards of thirty years. I daily recommend them, and I lately cured my clerk of rheumatism; he took the pills the same as I did. I am now 72 years old, strong and vigorous, and I am sure BRANDRETH'S PILLS are the cause. Anybody afflicted with rheumatism can come to me, and if they will take BRANDRETH'S PILLS, I will surely cure them. C. W. DYER.

NO. 3 FULTON MARKET,
NEW YORK CITY, Jan. 26, 1884.

I have been using BRANDRETH'S PILLS for the last 10 years. They are a wonderful medicine. There is nothing equal to them as Blood Purifiers and Liver Regulators. But I wish to state how remarkably they cure Rheumatism, and how easily: I was affected by Rheumatism of the legs. My business (wholesale fish dealer) naturally leads me to damp places. I was so bad I could not walk, and at night I suffered fearfully; I tried Balsams, Sarsaparillas, and all kinds of tinctures, but they did me no good, and I was afraid of being a cripple. I finally commenced using BRANDRETH'S PILLS. I took two every night for ten nights, then I began to improve; I continued taking them for 30 days, and I got entirely well. Now, when ever sick, I take BRANDRETH'S PILLS. They never fail. J. N. HARRIS.

ONE MODERN TERROR

Increasing in Frequency and Danger—What Can be Done to Stop the Progress of Kidney and Bladder Complaints?

There is no more agonizing class of disease, and none more certain "not to get well of itself," than the disorders of the kidneys and bladder. Physicians too frequently fail to recognize what they are, and even if knowing them, lack the skill for their proper treatment. So that they are liable to be allowed to progress until they are almost unendurable, and their victims are made to undergo the most frightful tortures of a surgical operation. The only medicine that does afford speedy relief and permanent cure of such affections is DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, (of Rondout, N. Y.) It is not a mere soother, temporarily, of pain; but by its alterative action purifies the blood, restores a healthful condition to the diseased organs, and even dissolves and causes the expulsion of gravel and stone from the kidneys and bladder. The testimony of hundreds who have been cured by it vouches for this. If you have weakness, or pain in the back over the kidneys, or if your urine is dark colored, do not delay treatment for a single day, but hasten at once to arrest the progress of the disease by the use of Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. Dr. Kennedy assures the public, by a reputation which he cannot afford to forfeit or imperil, that the FAVORITE REMEDY does invigorate the blood, cures liver, kidney and bladder complaints, as well as those diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females.

A Mormon Elder Expelled from Bavaria—The Pope's Life Threatened—Irish Conspirators Sentenced.

LONDON, June 21.—The sensational Paris dispatches, purporting to contain a revelation of the intentions of the Fenian leaders, has intensified the London dynamite scare. James Stephens, the ex-Head Center of the American Fenians, it is well known, has consented to revive and lead Fenianism in another warfare against England. He himself recently announced this fact. He has also admitted that he meant to call a conference in Paris of all those Irishmen who favored his plan. This he described to be an open warfare of a military character and argued that a movement of the kind was necessary, because of the practically barren nature of the policy of agitation maintained by Mr. Parnell and his talkative followers through the organization known as the Irish National League.

ROME, June 21.—A letter was received recently at the Vatican, from a source entitled to credence, stating that a well arranged plan to attack the Papal residence by dynamite had been matured, and would be carried out at the first favorable opportunity, the conspirators aiming at the life of His Holiness. This startling intelligence astounded the Cardinals, who at once held a conference, and immediately took steps to foil the would-be assassins. An extra guard of picked men was posted around the Vatican.

LONDON, June 21.—Elder Smoot, a Mormon missionary, has been expelled from Bavaria by order of the Minister of State. Smoot has succeeded in making many converts whom he was preparing to send to Utah, but this plan has been broken up for the present.

BOYS IN BLUE.

Mobile Infantry Capture First Infantry Prize—Grand Review by Governor Sherman and a Sham Battle.

DUBUQUE, IA., June 20.—There were between twelve and fifteen thousand persons present at the national military encampment to-day. Prizes were awarded as follows: Mobile Rifles, first prize on general excellency, especially of manual; Treadway Rifles, of St. Louis, second, on general excellency, and especially their skirmish drill; Branch Guards, of St. Louis, third; Company D, of St. Paul, fourth; Company of Muscatine, fifth, and the National Rifles, of Washington, sixth. The cavalry prize was given to the Milwaukee Light Cavalry—no competition. In the afternoon there was a dress-parade of all infantry, cavalry and artillery, they being reviewed by Governor Sherman, of Iowa; General Kirby Smith, General Gibbons, U. S. A., Commander of the Department of the Platte; Adjutant General Waddill, of Missouri, and Adjutant General Alexander, of Iowa. Then followed a sham battle. On the hill by the camp-grounds were lines of earthworks redoubts, rifle-pits, and a fort, one hundred feet square, commanding the city. The battle was planned by General Gibbons, and the attack made under his instructions. Nineteen companies of infantry, seven batteries of artillery and two squadrons of cavalry participated in the battle. An attack was made on the earth-works, which were finally captured, and afterward by a flank movement, the fort.

Parsell's Pickle.

DETROIT, MICH., June 20.—Officer Ernst Parsell, of Flint, this State, on Thursday shot and killed L. D. Pickle, whom he was attempting to arrest. Pickle fired several shots at Officer Carton, of Richfield Center, who attempted to arrest him while he was riding on the stage from the village to this city last week. He escaped arrest then, and since that time has been armed with two revolvers, and has been making dire threats against any officer who would dare attempt to arrest him. Under Sheriff Parsell received a warrant with orders to arrest Pickle, whom he found in front of a store in Richfield Center. Pickle attempted to shoot the officer on sight, but his revolver caught in the lining of his coat, and the officer, who had vainly requested him to submit to arrest, fired at him three times while he was desperately attempting to extricate his revolver. One of the shots struck Pickle in the breast, and he then said: "I have enough," and fell into the officer's arms and expired. Pickle was about sixty years old.

TRADES UNIONS.

An Address to the Republican Candidate for President.

The Chairman of the Indiana State Central Committee Said to be Injuring the Party by Opposing the Printers' Union, and Mr. Blaine is Asked to Interpose.

INDIANAPOLIS, June 22.—The Republican members of the Indianapolis Typographical Union will forward the following communication to Mr. Blaine to-morrow:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., June 22.

Hon. James G. Blaine, Augusta, Me.:

By direction of the Republican members of the Indianapolis Typographical Union, indorsed by members of like political sentiments of other trades organizations, viz.: German Typographical Union, locomotive engineers, barbers, varnishers, molders, carpenters, machinists, blacksmiths, cigarmakers, several divisions of the Knights of Labor, and the Trades and Labor Assemblies of Indianapolis this letter is addressed to you.

Preliminary to our request, which will appear later, it is necessary to state that by the injudicious action taken by John C. New, proprietor of the Indianapolis Journal, in regard to the differences between himself and the Typographical Union, he positively refusing to investigate the charges of unjust and dishonest treatment of the employes by his foreman, has produced a great amount of discord within the labor element of the Republican party, and threatens to assume vast proportions during the coming campaign, unless something be speedily done to avert the consequences, which will certainly culminate in the defeat of the party in Marion County, at least, to say nothing of the effect it will have upon the result in the whole State, for the laboring element is a unit on the question of recognition and earnest consideration of this important matter.

We are informed through a source deemed reliable that a letter was received by parties in Chicago previous to your nomination, to the effect it was your desire that John C. New be made Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee of Indiana. We respectfully request that you, by such means as you shall deem proper, urge upon Mr. New the importance of settling the differences now pending between him and the printers, and again reuniting into one solid army the Republican hosts of the Hoosier State. This affair may seem to be local in its application, but we assure you it will become a question of such magnitude that the Republican party dare not ignore within the borders of this State, with its numerous organizations of trades unions, among whose members are many who were converted to the Republican party by impulses higher than mere personal advancement, and who for four long years battled to maintain the principle involved in the very best foundation of the party.

BUTLER'S RESPONSE.

The Greenback Nominee for President

Acknowledges its Announcement by an Expression of His Views on the Currency Question.

NEW YORK, June 17.—In response to the formal announcement of his nomination by the committee of the Greenback National Convention, General Butler says:

LOWELL, MASS., June 12, 1884.

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION—I received at your hands official announcement of the action of the convention at Indianapolis with deep sensibility. In the ordinary course of political events the choice of a convention of representative men of any considerable portion of my fellow-citizens according to me this, the highest honor they can confer, would call for grateful acknowledgement, even though it might be a selection to represent the thought of such convention upon questions which commonly divide the political parties. Views upon such questions may have been inherited, or be an outgrowth of measures merely of administration. The great questions you present are higher and grander than any mere political measure.

Nearly a quarter of a century ago, when the very existence of the Republic, and the establishment of a democratic representative Government hung trembling upon the issue of the greatest civil war the world had ever known, or may ever know, by the wisdom born of imperious necessity a financial system, springing from a patriotic impulse to save the Nation's life, and rescue the hope of free institutions, for all men, from going down forever in darkness and death, was devised by the great and good men of that day, to whose care the Republican Government, to be administered for the people and by the people, had been confided.

That system of finance, for a free people, in its infancy saved the life of the nation, perishing without it, and broke the chains which enslaved four million men. It gave this country, with war raging, a prosperity it had never known. It enabled the people to assess upon themselves and pay taxes of an extent before unknown in any country. It made it possible for the Government to repay threefold all it received in loans from any creditor, or gave to him security more profitable and staple than ever issued [illegible] in the world, and made the financial system of our Government at once the envy and admiration of all men.

This was done by a legal-tender currency, while questions as to its ability were raised by the very form of legislation by which it was enacted, and while still graver doubts prevail in the minds of many wise, patriotic men whether a legal-tender currency, inexpensive in fact, resting not on the intrinsic value of the material on which it was coined, was within the constitutional competency and power of the legislative branches of the Government.

That question having been three times submitted to the Supreme Court of the United States, the very highest tribunal of constitutional construction, was at last decided in the affirmative with such unanimity as to show that there might have been possible a reasonable doubt against it.

One purpose of your organization, and of those who thought and acted with you, although not of it, was to support and sustain this money as the currency of the people. This people's currency, you well say, was designated by its friends by the pet name of the "greenback."

Two years ago I did myself the honor to say that a currency so commended by the merit of its great deeds, wrought for the people's safety and prosperity, enacted by the highest legislative power, adjudicated by such a court, and the decision about to be reaffirmed, was an accomplished fact, never again to be disturbed or doubted; so that its friends might well say: "See, the end of our labors in this regard has come; let us rejoice, let those who aided in this great work press on to deal with equally important, unsettled and necessary measures for the welfare of the whole people.

"The legal-tender having become the very foundation of, as well as a measure of value, entertwined with all the business of the people, the engine of prosperity of the Nation, it seems to me almost an act of cruelty again to disturb, causelessly, a financial question which has been so set at rest, with the assent of all good men, as much so as was the question of the right of man to hold his brother man in slavery."

Therefore, I said, "I am glad that this question is no longer a part in political consideration, and statesmanship may now turn from it, as the country has turned from the questions of slavery and war." But, alas, the power of the darkness of the hour. The resurrectionists of false ideas of the dead past dug up the moldering remains of contention from the peaceful graves where they slept, and threaten, by a rehash of exploded resolutions formulated into a platform by a party convention, to revivify and agitate controversies which will unsettle commercial values and hinder and delay the business energies of our people, with apparently but a single object, to extend a system of purely paper currency, issued by corporations, established by the Government, indeed, but for private emolument and gain to the corporators, which currency is made valuable only because it is made redeemable in the very greenbacks which this ghoul-like agitation seeks to repudiate, overthrow and destroy.

Such a currency, Andrew Jackson, with the prescience and wisdom of a statesman, by the iron hand of the soldier, sustained by the Democracy of more than a generation ago, had wholly crushed out, and in the hope of the wise and good, had buried forever, as one of the grevious errors of administration which had insidiously crept into the Government for the aggrandizement of a few to the destruction of the people. As a Democrat, taught in the Jackson school in my early youth, with my judgment matured by many years' converse in public affairs, aided by earnest and deep study, with the intensity of purpose which a topic of such magnitude, affecting every interest of the people—nay, it may be the very existence of free institutions—demands, I am constrained, were it the last act of my life, in view of this attempt to undo what Jackson had so well done, coming from whatsoever quarter it may, to say to you, gentlemen, there seems a wisdom, indeed a necessity for the further continuance of your organization in this renewed exigency, and therefore upon this contestation I am with you. And if there were but two of us, we ought to stand together against this great wrong, and call upon all true men to stand with us, either inside or outside, as the case may be, of the other political organizations which may aim to perfect other measures for the good of the country.

I thank you for your suggestion that in other matters toward which your organization turns the interest of labor; the preservation of the lands of the people for the benefit of the people; the control of the agencies created by the Government to be used for the good of the people; to regulate and control a system of inter-State commerce, which shall control and cheapen the transportation of persons, freight and intelligence, and to protect all in their just rights, and confine all to their true duties, to the end that there may be in this country equality of rights, equality of burdens, equality of privileges and equality of powers to all persons under the law—has been the political rule of my life. I have the honor to be, with personal esteem, very respectfully your friend and servant,

BENJAMIN F. BUTLER.

They, in company with a little fellow named Schiftes, were in bathing, and went beyond their depth, and, being unable to swim, were drowned before aid could reach them. The bodies were recovered soon afterward. Flunte was an orphan, his father and mother having both died during the past four months. Schwartz is a son of George Schwartz, a butcher.

AT Louisville, the other day, a gang of man were unloading a barge of gravel. It being old and rotten, suddenly sprung a leak and collapsed before the men could get off. Breaking violently into three pieces, it threw twenty men high into the air, and all fell in one mass into fifteen feet of water. For a while there was a scene of the wildest confusion. The bobbing heads of the men seemed like so many corks, fighting and scrambling with each other for support. Men on the shore threw ropes and planks, and all were drawn out except one, a negro, named Fletcher Phillips, who went down with the barge. The majority of the men were uninjured, but three or four were seriously hurt by being struck by timber of the barge. These are George Warner, George Smith, Jim Hatch. Hatch was drawn ashore, after having been under water several minutes, in an unconscious condition, having received internal injuries, from which he will die. Several men had to be resuscitated by having the water rolled out of them. When Clinton Pierce went down three men clung to him, and held him at the bottom of the river, and he only released himself after a hard struggle, in which he choked one man until he was exhausted.

THE DAIRY.

—A British medical journal says that cows drink filthy water for its saline taste, and proposes an antidote in the shape of rock salt, kept always in reach of the cows.

—Why is it that Canada makes the best cheese in the country and the poorest butter? The creamery system is almost unknown in the Dominion, but cheese factories flourish like a green bay horse.

—We are just now in the flush of the milk season, because the cows are coming onto pasture. How many of the farmers have prepared for keeping up the flow of milk, say sixty days from now? Have they taken the precaution to prepare supplemental feed, in the shape of millet and corn fodder, when the grass begins to fail? If not there is yet time to remedy this negligence. The progressive, economic farmer has not forgotten this, but the careless and shiftless have to be reminded of these things periodically.

—The Utica Herald tells of a factory-man who made a sweet cured cheese for the home trade, which was a porous, mellow article, lacking in the twang of the sour cured kind. It was highly relished by the patrons of the factory, but was not of the kind shippers want. The whey was drawn perfectly sweet, and the curd was salted and put to press before any acid was developed. The cheese was made last September, kept through the winter and when used this spring was a prime article. The Herald wonders why more are not made for the home trade. Those sold from the factory last fall brought a cent more than the leading price on the Utica board.

—Mr. Hiram Smith, one of Wisconsin's best known and most successful dairymen, says "skim milk is worth about an average of thirty-five cents per hundred pounds, to make into skim cheese, exclusive of the labor; the labor goes into the general farm work, and making of the butter and cheese. We don't figure on these branches, but on the labor on the farm. It is worth about thirty-five cents a hundred to make into skim cheese to sell to those that want it. There is just as good a market, just as legitimate a market for skim cheese as full milk cheese. And it is folly for farmers to take their milk to the factories and make cheese, and get about ninety-two to ninety-three cents per hundred, while if they manufacture it into butter, they get more than that for the butter, and enough to make up a dollar and forty cents per hundred for the milk."

About Washing Butter.

It is a constantly recurring question in the West, where it has been the practice for three fourths of a century, to gather butter in a hard mass, and let it stand from one to six days before working over, why butter should be washed to free it from buttermilk instead of being worked to accomplish the same thing. The reason is, that working does not accomplish the same thing. Most people have plans of their own in working butter, with their hands, with a ladle, with a worker, and in a butter bowl, but each is conducted on the principle that buttermilk is water, and does not contain any other substances which should be wholly removed from the butter. These people do not understand that these substances exist, and can be dissolved out far better than worked out. This last operation is calculated to divide and subdivide these drops of moisture that remain imprisoned by the mass of butter, rather than to expel them entirely.

Buttermilk contains particles of unchurned cream, caseous matter, sugar, etc., to the amount of over ten per cent. of its weight, and these are all foreign to good butter, or its keeping qualities. Several of these substances are soluble in water, especially casein; brine absorbs others, and it is very easy to see that washing soon has these substances all removed. High authorities like Prof. Arnold assert that there is a membraneous matter to be found in buttermilk, of "fleshy" character, which is liable to decay and destroy the flavor of the butter, unless removed. This can only be perfectly accomplished by washing, as trying to expel it by pressure would unite it more firmly to the globules. After working butter, all the moisture that remains, some ten per cent., must be charged with the same elements that are in the expelled fluid, but if we wash out this buttermilk, and at last exchange the sixteen per cent. of natural moisture with its casein, etc., for pure water and salt, the butter is left as pure as any mechanical process can make it. The globules of the butter have not been flattened or injured by working, as is often the case when butter is worked until the buttermilk is expelled, or (what is called expelled) invisible to the eye.

If butter when in the granular state is washed free from the extraneous matters, its keeping qualities must be far superior to that in which these elements are allowed to remain, though even in homeopathic qualities. When butter is washed free from these matters by a not very strong brine, it is then possible for salt to preserve butter, but if they remain, no salting will add one day to its keeping, but in a measure becomes a disguise to conceal other flavors and imperfections, that finally show themselves in all poor butter. When butter is washed it is possible to churn, salt and pack at the one performance, with great saving of labor.

It is argued that, unless butter is allowed to stand several hours after salting, the butter will have a streaked or mottled appearance. This will be so if the butter is allowed to drain too long after taking from a churn; but if it is salted when containing a large amount of this moisture the salt will be dissolved in working, and there will be no danger of finding sharp, flinty crystals of salt when cutting down the grain of the butter, and by the time the butter is worked enough, the liability of streaks will be avoided. The possibilities of streaks may be also lessened by putting small quantities into the package at a time, when packing, and if the pressure is evenly and firmly applied, and the appearing moisture absorbed as the packing proceeds, the streaks will be very few.—Western Reserve, O., Cor. Country Gentleman.

TUTT'S PILLS

TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, fullness after eating, aversion to exertion of body or mind, Eructation of food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these three "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect

Mont Baldy made us a short call Monday morning. He informed us he has commenced building his drug store in Bellevue. In this issue he advertises his fine stallion, Clay Chief, for sale.

Rev. Mr. Dieken only preached one sermon here last Sunday, having to leave Bellevue on the 2 p. m. boat for the southern part of the State where he is holding a protracted meeting this week.

The seiners visited the river the other day, about half equipped. They made a "big haul," however, but unfortunately the fish were all dead. Imagine their chagrin when they made the discovery.

J. D. Norris and Frank Grant, of Petersburg, visited Osgood, Indiana, last week, to see how their horses in training there are progressing. They were much pleased with the speed the animals are sowing, and they will enter them in some of the fall races.

The day has come when to leave the grave of the departed one unmarked by a neat stone, is not suffered by even those in the most ordinary walks of life, and all can be pleased in both design and price by Huschart & Co., of Lawrenceburg, Ind. John Beall, of Hebron is their agent.

Allie W. Gaines has left Lawrenceburg and gone to Chattanooga where he will engage in the practice of law. We are sorry to have Allie leave our bar entirely, but trust in his new field he will find all the business he is able to properly attend. He is a deserving young attorney, and those entrusting business to him will find it closely looked after.

The fishing club tried its luck again last Friday, and succeeded in landing a few fish, principally craws. Bange, on horseback commanded the expedition, and his costume and accoutrements gave him such a remarkable scottish appearance that he was offered liberal pay to traverse the principal streets in the town when the crowd returned, but he respectfully declined, and is consequently a poorer man than he ought to be.

We understand that the negro preacher who was here during the late turbulent proceedings among the colored element, visited Florence, gained the confidence of the negroes over there and fleeced them pretty heavily, going so far as to sell calves and chickens belonging to some of them and pocketing the proceeds. It seems that the colored people are about as easily humbugged as the whites, and swallow any lie an impositor chooses to impose on them.

Early last Thursday morning in company with Prof. Stephenson as a companion, (and an entertaining one he be), we started to Lawrenceburg by way of Petersburg. We arrived at Petersburg about the time many of the citizens had cleared their teeth of the remnants of the beefsteak devoured for breakfast, and of course they were in fine spirits and buckling on their armor for another day's struggle in the battle of life.

Arriving sometime before the "May Flower" was due from Aurora, we had an opportunity to make a few observations that induced us to believe Pete seriously contemplates taking a second growth.

The Chapin boys are occupying their new store building which is favorably located, while Stott Bros'. two story building on the opposite corner makes a very imposing appearance. This building is not completed, but will soon be ready to occupy. The first story will be a handsome and well arranged store room, in which we trust the boys will fully realize their fondest hopes, raking in the shekles by the small measure full.

J. Frank Grant's business has notified him that it requires more room, and to meet this demand he has Gov. Porter in command of a force building a large addition to his already commodious store. When this increase of space is supplied, he will greatly increase certain lines of stock now carried as well as introduce many new ones. Right here we pause to remind both J. Frank and the Stott Bros. that the RECORDER is a splendid medium through which to keep the people posted as to their movements on the checker-board of trade.

The Jumbo building going up in Petersburg is the new distillery which is rapidly approaching completion. This building is being reared on the foundation of the one destroyed by fire, and when completed will be one of the finest in the State, because when Capt. Holabird bosses the building of anything it has to be done in the best of style.

Among the latter day business men in that town is C. S. Buchanan, , proprietor of the city drug emporium, who has been doing a good business ever since he located there.

No sooner than we entered the town limits that morning, we discovered it was not properly ballasted, but as soon as it was ascertained that Bishop Schramm had been absent since the previous morning, the trouble was revealed, but in a short time he came up smiling, and the inhabitants seemed reconciled to commence again the voyage of life.

When the "May Flower" arrived, we committed our friend, the professor, to the tender care of the good people of the town, and in company with Capt. Parker and John Stott, took passage for Lawrenceburg to spend the day. Captain Alden was at the wheel, and the way the little craft split the turbulent Ohio was a caution. She is a neat, spacious little steamer, and, for speed, but few of the larger boats excel her.

When we arrived at Lawrenceburg the mercury was crowding the nineties, and what few people were in town seemed about wilted, and could be induced to leave the shade only in cases of emergency. The business men were enjoying a great boom—in rest, and business was the dullest we ever saw it there.

We called at the Register office, where we found W. H. O'Brien, senior editor of that paper, and secretary of the Lawrenceburg Fair, doing editorial work at a job press. He informed us that everything at the Fair grounds is being put in first-class order, and the prospects for the approaching Fair are so flattering that he anticipates much the best exhibition ever had. The races will be numerous and many fast horses will participate.

Returning to Petersburg at 5 p. m., we expected to see the croquet ground thronged, but it was as quiet as a grave yard, which so surprised us that we at once inquired the cause of the very remarkable occurrence, when an old, gray headed man beckoned to us, and stepping around the corner with him, he said if we would take a solemn oath never to reveal who gave us the information, he would tell all about it. We consented, and being duly and solemnly sworn, he related to us how the professor had been induced to engage in a game with the champions of the town, and how he proved a wonder to them, carrying off all honors, which had so distressed the defeated and their friends that they had sought the solitude of their homes to overcome the disaster that evening visited upon their estimation of their prowess as croquetists. Fearing that some violence might grow out of the professor's lily advised conduct in our absence by defeating these parties, we hastened to find him, and after having partaken of a good supper at Mrs. Schramm's, we enjoyed a very pleasant drive home.

A band of excellent musicians serenaded Dr. Furnish Saturday night, but fortunately the doctor was three or four miles out in the country at the time. The three happy bachelors were also treated to the "sole" stirring music, but they failed to acknowledge the compliment by sending down the wine and cake, or even offering to send a little card down to Cy's or Keene's. The band was lead by Atty. Stephens who blew the bass viol accompanied by the vocal organs of the other members of the band.

Col. Bob Pate informed Postmaster Lucas the other day that he would visit our Fair this year with his stable of running horses. Captain Pate has a fortune invested in fast horses, and his stable, consisting of eighteen thoroughbreds, and contains some of the fleetest horses on the turf.—Lawrenceburg Register.

A large acreage of tobacco has been planted. Corn somewhat backward. Wheat good, and ripening very fast.

Sunday school every Sunday morning at 9 o'clock. The Sunday-school convention conducted by Rev. Duncan last week, was largely attended.

Married—On the 18th inst., William Cluster to Miss Patsie Johnson, daughter of Thos. J. After the ceremony they, with others, took their departure for Cincinnati on the evening train. May happiness be their lot.

One night last week when Weeden Sleet returned from church he went into his house and found things scattered about the room as if some person had been in during his absence. When about to get in bed, he saw, as he thought, a person lying there sound asleep; he never took time to see whether he was asleep or not, but immediately put on his clothes and started for assistance, about a mile away over the roughest road in the county. When aid arrived they went in and found him still a sleep. They cocked their pistols and told him to skip, but he refused to move. Thinking him very hard to wake, one of the party fired a pistol over his head, he still refused to make a move, and on a closer examination they found the stranger to be a ragman, which some one had placed there during Sleet's absence.

A. C. Clore spent part of his senior vacation at home. He returns this week to Springfield, O., to receive the honors of a graduate of Wittenberg college.

Orren Beall died at his home near here from injuries received from a burn sometime since while in a state of apoplexy. His remains rested a few days in the vault at Bullittsburg from whence they were taken to Sand Run, Sunday and interred.

Florence.

John Reed, our cigar man, had another serious accident in his family. All are improving rapidly but John, yet hopes are entertained of his recovery.

Mr. W. R. Terrill, ex-county surveyor, has completed a well executed plat of the town of Florence, which discloses several streets and alleys that have been enclosed and not generally known.

Business being a little dull just now in the police court Judge L. C. Yager is making a speculation by holding the horses of persons who visit our town, or, as the boys say, he is a stock dealer. He held one on Saturday for a young man who stopped at T. L. Swetnam's to purchase some dry goods, for which service he received a nickie. The Judge says he thinks the price should be 25c.

The rain seems to have subsided for the present and the dark clouds that hung so threateningly about us have given place to the bright, glowing sunshine, and we propose to take advantage of the pleasant prospects by sending the paper a few items as kind of a corner stone, lest our locality be forgotten. "This an ill wind that blows nobody any good," says the old adage, and while the wet weather discommoded the pleasure parties and prevented the curing of clover hay, and brought up the grass and weeds in the farmers fields of corn and potatoes, it has made luxuriant pastures and meadows and been a season of rejoicing with tobacco growers.

The select and interesting school taught by Mrs. Kirtley, closed its session on the 6th inst. The school was composed principally of young ladies and misses, all of whom strove hard to excel the other. Several prizes were offered on different grades of merit, one of which was a silver medal, awarded to Miss Fannie Slater, of Big Bone, for general improvments, she making an average of 97 7-11 per cent. In their relative order next was Miss Sallie Green, also of Big Bone, who made 94¼ per cent. These two young ladies have been fine students and have been earnest competitors for the prizes. They have both returned to their homes, and will be much missed by the good society for their genteel department and social relations. Miss Sallie Snyder, of Florence, next deserves particular mention, her recitations being generally perfect with 94; Miss Florence Marcus 91 1-27; Master Clarence Hoover 90 3-5; Miss Jennie Stephens 90 1-10; Miss Florence Tanner 87; Miss Bessie Hoover 87. All of the above being entitled to cuolgy had I time and space. We are apprised that while competition ran high for the prizes the most perfect harmony prevailed.

The ball has opened again, and this time its a preacher. I don't mean to convey the idea that the preachers are attending balls, but that the wedding ball is rolling again. The last victims made happy in our community were our good pastor of the Baptist church Thomas Potts and Miss Annie Henry, of Kenton county, a beautiful and accomplished young lady. This little affair was conducted so quietly that not much material was afforded for gossip. The marriage rites were solemnized June 17th at the residence of the late Henry Buckner, by Elder Felix, of Covington. The first intimation we had of the affair was the ringing of bells and beating of tin pans about 12 o'clock at night at Capt. Snyder's, in the suburbs of Florence, where the happy couple had come to spend a few days of the honey moon. The boys who never let occasion like this slip by, were giving them their best music. We at first thought that the Captain had a night swarm of bees that were taking advantage of the cool night to commigrate. We navn't learned yet whether the person treated or not, but our impression is that the boys came away a little dry.

With large offerings, the market continues active for all grades of new tobacco, when in good order. There is no change to report in favor of old tobacco. When sweet, and with heavy body, the demand and price is fair; but when chuffy, and out of order, cents is the uniform value.

MISUNDERSTOOD.

A Fable.

I hold it is a solemn truth which bears a lesson good,
'Tis better not to speak at all than be misundertood.
In silence there may be a balm, in speech a deadly bane,
Therefore, 'tis best to silent be: and always thus remain.
And lest you doubt the fact which I so earnestly declare,
Please call to mind the story of the Lambkin and the Bear.

A Lambkin sported gay and free, life was a joy to him,
When in his pathway there appeared a Bear morose and grim.
"Good day," quoth Bruin, with a grin, "how is your dear ma-ma?"
The Lambkin trembled with affright, and only answered "Ba-a."
"And do you dare say 'Bah' to me?" the monster fiercely cried;
"I'll eat you up!" and so he did, and thus the Lambkin died.

So, I hold it is a solemn truth which bears a lesson good,
'Tis better not to speak at all than be misundertood.

WHY HER HAIR TURNED GRAY.

"I could an' if I would," said John, "tell you why that young woman's hair turned from brown to white in a single night."

Our eyes followed the slender retreating form of a young woman as he spoke.

"Her lover was drowned?" asked Louise.

"Brain fever," said Robert, as he lighted his cigar.

"She saw a ghost," whispered I.

"Wrong, all of you. Do you want to hear a strange bit of truth?"

Of course we did, so John began:

"It was in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts that there once lived a man—the man who married our heroine. He was tall and lithe and strong and handsome, and she was young and dark and beautiful and gay—for Massachusetts. The tall man wooed and won her, and married her, all within six short months. They nestled down in a farm-house and lived in down east fashion and baked beans and brown bread on Saturdays or Sundays—which is it?"

"Baked beans on Saturday night and brown bread on Sunday morning," said Louise, with decision.

Yes, and a little talk of Faneuil Hall and Wendell Phillips now and again, an occasional quotation from Emerson, a semi-occasional allusion to Margaret Fuller, daily thoughts of the cousins on Beacon street, etc., etc. These slight occupations, and their great love for each other which was indeed boundless, filled much of their time. There were, to be sure, other business moments when Alicia—had I said that her name was Alicia—made the cakes, for they lived very simply in the country, and when Nathan was away on his work of collecting, for he combined the duties of County Collector with his legal work in the nearest village, some mile or two away.

It was a very pretty sight to see those two at tea. Alicia wore a blue gown that Nathan much admired, and poured the tea from an old pot brought back by a Salem ancestor from China. The caddy was its mate, that came with it; and Alicia lifted its cover tenderly to reach the mysterious wee, dried leaves that her fairy touch and the warm flame were to transform into a potent charm. On these nights—for it was late in the winter—there would be a fire blazing on the hearth, the kitten would purr in the pauses, and Hetty, the girl, as maid servants are called in New England villages, could be heard through the wide chinks of the kitchen door, taking the upper C with the freedom and ease of a prima donna. Alicia would smile quickly as she heard her, and Nathan would smile more slowly. So, with the sipping of tea and the crackling of toast, the evening meal would progress. Afterward, Nathan's pipe and Alicia's knitting gray stockings always filled up the evening. At nine o'clock a glass of cider and red apples; at 9:30 lights out, and only an old-fashioned dark house loomed against the night. A monotonous life, but a happy one, and happier as time went one. But at last time seemed to stop for Alicia. Nathan was called away on business; would be gone a week, he said. Alicia need not be afraid with Hetty. There was really no danger, if she would be careful in one particular. No stranger was to be admitted into the house on any pretext whatever. Here Nathan whispered: "For my strong box is under the bed in our room, you know, full of county money. I am in the midst of collecting now. Leave the box there. It is safe; but promise that no one shall come in: and now, dearest, I must say good-by." But we draw the veil.

Imagine—or remember—a lovers' parting. In these two were lovers only three months wedded, kisses, a tear or two, words—kisses again. Ah, well, the description is like the tea-leaves, stupid, dry, until the fire of love and the fairy touch of affection metamorphose the story of a parting into real separation.

After Nathan was gone Alicia sighed and read poetry, and sang a little to herself, and so the first two days slipped by. On the third day there came up a bad storm, one of those early spring storms, with thunder and hail and other elemental disturbances attached.

In the midst then of this appropriate tragedy music, there tottered to Alicia's door an old man. One arm hung helpless; his limbs trembled; he seemed very harmless and weak. But Alicia remembered her husband's words. She gave him the shelter he begged for, in the barn only, although her gentle heart smote her. This was at four in the afternoon. At eight in the evening, the storm having settled down upon the lonely land, the lonely farm-house, and the two lonely women, the old man appeared again at the kitchen door. He was old and chilled and hungry. Alicia's heart smote her so hard this time that she opened the door. She bade the old man enter. She gave him food. She sent him up the ladder to the attic, for, in spite of the cousins in Beacon street, this was the simple "lift" in the country house, and then she and Hetty took away the ladder in pride and security. The old man was safe, thank Heaven, and so were she and Hetty and the money-box.

But the thought of the money-box worried her. She looked under the bed to see if it were all right. There is something in the mere act of looking under the bed that is disorganizing to the feminine mind. After Alicia had looked, she began to feel a trifle timorous. She went out and listened at the ladder-hole. The old man snored. That sound should certainly have encouraged her, but it didn't. The combination of a snoring man in the house, a stranger, even though maimed and halt, and a money-box under the bed, of all places, and a storm raging, and alack and alas! a broken promise to one's husband; this combination was very disagreeable.

Moved by an irresistible impulse, Alicia took from a drawer a pistol belonging to her husband. She had found it accidentally but a few days before in an old trunk of his filled with bachelor belongings. She was glad now that she had moved it down from the attic, where the old trunk stood in one corner and the old man snored in another. The sight of the pistol did not perhaps restore her courage, as she had hoped it would, for she put it back with a shudder, threw a hasty glance around the rooms, and with a shrug at her own fears went to the window, pulled up the shade, and looked out. The moon was struggling through the clouds; the long line of roads leading past the house up to a distant hill shone out white from between the dark fences on either side. Up on the hill, a quarter of a mile distant, there was a moving spot—some belated neighbor on his way home to the village probably. Alicia felt comforted. She wondered, idly, who it might be. 'Squire Roberts, perhaps, coming from Widow Hobart's. There was little doubt that that would be a match, though how a widow could ever remarry! She shuddered, then thought of Nathan, and smiled.

Alicia stood at the window to watch the neighbor pass. She had taken down her hair, and it fell in a long jet braid down her back. She looked very young and girlish, and as she stood she hummed to herself—partly by way of keeping up her rising courage, I dare say—the quaint words of the old Scotch-English, and which Nathan, being Scotch himself, was fond of:

He gave his bridle-rein a shake,
And turned him on the shore
With, Adieu for evermore, my love,
Adieu for evermore.

By the way, the spot on the hillside was growing nearer and clearer. It was not 'Squire Roberts, after all, but men on horse-back—three of them. The woman's country curiosity was piqued. Equestrians on a Massachusetts highway at nine p. m. were an unusual a sight as hobgoblins. As the riders came nearer she saw they were muffled in long black cloaks. A straggling moonbeam struck across their faces. Great heavens! They were masked.

For a [illegible] wild confusion [illegible] Alicia's mind. The money-box, the lonely house! These men had come to rob the county in her husband's absence. Could she resist them? Ah!

Adieu for evermore, my love,
Adieu for evermore.

But then her thoughts grew calmer. She watched the men turn in at the gate. They did not speak or look to right or left. They rode in; they dismounted.

Alicia flew, first for Hetty, and then both of them—women to the last—for the one man within reach. It was all the work of a moment. Down came the old forlorn bit of male humanity. To him appeals the young, live woman. His brain seemed alive at least. He grasps the situation. Daring thieves knowing of the husband's absence have come for the strong box full of county money. There are three of them.

Says the old man: "Have you a pistol?"

"Yes," replies Alicia.

"Give it to me. Is that the box under your bed?"

"Yes," replies Alicia again.

"All this time the men have beat on the door, but no word has been spoken by them.

"You must trust me," says the old man.

"Yes," replies Alicia bravely. It is all she can do, even though he should play her false.

"Light a candle and bring me the cartridges. I will keep them and reload your pistol if necessary. Stand here at the top of the stairs, so. I am just behind you. Blow out your candle. Soon they will speak and ask to be let in. You must not reply. They will beat in the door. They will break it open. There will be one man who will dart ahead up the stairs—the ringleader, you know. Wait until this man is within three steps of you. Wait until I say 'Fire;' then pull the trigger. That man will fall. The others will run off—that is, they may. It is our only chance. Do you understand it."

"Yes," replies Alicia again, in a clear, firm tone. All fear has vanished. She is calm and quiet now.

The robbers were beating at the door. The old man was crouched behind her. Hetty in the background moaning out her "Holy Joseph's" and "Blessed Mary's." Alicia, erect at the head of the stairs with her husband's pistol in her hand. Ah, her husband! Her heart beat at that thought. Should she ever see him again?

Adieu for evermore, my love,
Adieu for evermore.

The strain was over at last. All went as the old man had prophesied. The door burst open. Up the stairs came a strong man's tread, close up to within three steps of her. Must she shoot! Must she kill! Yes, for her husband's sake.

"Fire," said the old man, in a whisper. Alicia fired. The strong man fell with a groan to the floor below. There was a rush for the door. The others had fled. Through the silence Alicia heard the sound of horses' hoofs on the highway. They were gone. She was saved; so was the money-box. But below in the hall lay that silent, heavy form, no sound after the first moan. "Blessed Mary!" Hetty's voice broke the ghastly stillness again.

"You have killed him," said the old man. "Light your candle and go down and see who he is."

Alicia lighted the candle, and holding it over her head walked firmly down the stairs; her black hair, loosened now, fell about her like a mourning veil. As she walked she kept her eyes fixed on the corner of the hall at the foot of the staircase, where the silent figure lay on its back, its hands outstretched under a picture on the wall, a picture of the Christ on the cross. It flashed through the woman's mind then that at least this villain died at His feet.

"Blessed Mary!" began Hetty again.

"Lift the mask," called the old man's voice.

Alicia lifted the mask from the face of the dead man and saw her husband!

"My God!" said Robert, and threw away his cigar. "The husband! That is a story worth hearing."

John continued: "She did not even faint, poor girl. She sat there by his side on the floor all night without a tear, with her eyes on his face and the sorrowful Christ on the cross above them. But when the neighbors came in with the morning light her hair fell about her ashen face in a white veil, as you see it to-day."

"But how?" asked Louise.

"He had come to rob the county of its money," said John, calmly, lighting his cigar with Robert's stub; "that's all."

"And the old man wasn't a rascal in league with the husband, then?"

"No, no; a worthy tramp. Of course, you thougth he was to be a villain," said I explaining.

"And John, afterward?"

"No anti-climax," said John. "Look at her hair and her eyes, and her heart-breaking smile, and remember her song:

Adieu for evermore, my love,
Adieu for evermore!

"Yes, for evermore. Even Heaven can not reunite these two," said Louise, who is literal.—Warren Murdock, in N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

How to Make Ice Cream.

The secret of making good ice cream of any grade, lies in the freezing. The old way of freezing cream, which is still in use among small confectioners, consisted of occasionally stirring the cream while it was freezing in a tin can, set in a tub of ice and salt. A more easy and expeditious method is within the reach of the average housekeeper in these days of patent freezers. The same principle underlies all the best known patents, i. e., the mixing of the cream by a wooden beater, which revolves inside the can by the same motion that slightly changes the position of the can in the outer tub of ice and salt. This freezing mixture should be composed of three parts of crushed ice to one of coarse salt, of which care should be taken that it does not reach high enough around the sides of the can to penetrate to the interior, and so spoil the cream: the water formed in the outer tub by the melting of the freezing mixture need not be drawn off while the cream is being frozen unless it is likely to get into the can, because the water is intensely cold. If it is desired to pack the cream after it is frozen, the water may be drawn off and enough more ice and salt placed around the can to reach nearly to the top. The cream packed in this way can be kept over night, or longer, if the freezing mixture is properly renewed. When ice cream is "molded" or packed in the molds of fancy shapes all the openings should be closed with butter, or oiled paper fixed about the apertures of the mold with paste or gum tragacanth.

Ice creams of the most ordinary sort are made with milk thickened with arrowroot or corn starch, in the proportion of a tablespoonful to a quart, dissolved in cold water, and then boiled in milk, which is cooled, sweetened and flavored before it is frozen. The sort of ice cream usually made at home is composed of milk, with a small proportion of cream, with eggs and sugar added to it; for instance, dissolve half a pound of sugar in a quart of milk: place it over the fire and let it heat to boiling point: meantime beat three eggs to cream, pour the boiling milk into them and then return to the fire and stir until it begins to thicken then at once remove it from the fire; stir until it is smooth; then flavor it, cool it, and, when it is cool freeze it according to directions given. Frozen custard is made in the same way, only five eggs at least are added to a quart of milk.

French ice cream, thick and yellow, is made by boiling a quart of cream with a long vanilla bean, and then cooling and straining it; then the yolks of two eggs are beaten smooth with three-quarters of a pound of sugar; the flavored cream is then mixed with the eggs and stirred over the fire until it begins to thicken; directly the cream begins to thicken, take it from the fire, and stir it for five minutes, then cool it and freeze it.—Juliet Corson.

How Ben Hardin Fooled a Literary Society.

"Ben Hardin was a brilliant fellow, and he had a strong sense of humor. When he was elected to Congress in 1815 he had already served several terms in the Kentucky Legislature, and was noted throughout the State as a lawyer. He started, however, for Washington dressed in the rough clothing of a frontier State, and he wore the slouch hat and the long buff overcoat of the West. As he was passing through Virginia two young smart-looking fellows overtook him and fell into conversation with him. Hardin saw at their first words that they took him for a greenhorn, and he put on such manners and accent as to confirm their illusion. The meeting took place within a few miles of the town where they were to stop for the night. In the course of the conversation the young bloods told him there was to be a literary society meeting that night, and that if he would attend he might hear some fine speaking, and at this point one of them, slyly winking to the other, said: "And perhaps, stranger, you will join the debate yourself?"

"I don't know," replied Hardin. "I have spoke some in old Kaintucky. What mought your question be."

The question was not new to him. It was one of the leading ones of the day—a political issue upon which he was thoroughly posted. As old Ben Hardin heard it, however, he shook his head and said: "Boys, you will hev to excuse me on thet. I ain't up on thet subject. Now, if it was whether pursuit was better than possession, or some of our old subjects, I allow I'd tackle ye. But about this yere politics I don't know."

After much persuasion, however, he promised the young men that he would attend and he "would say suthin' anyhow." The party separated at the hotel, and the young fellows went off laughing at the fun they expected to have that night. They told their friends, and in a short time the whole town knew of the green Kentuckian's arrival, and when the literary society opened every seat was filled. The exercises went off quietly until the debate commenced, when every one looked at Hardin. He sat quietly until the close. The two young fellows made their speeches, and very fair ones, too. As the second one closed and Mr. Hardin arose, each one in the audience nudged his neighbor, and every face was ready to smile. Their expressions changed, however, as old Ben took up the subject and treated it most eloquently. He tore to pieces the speeches of the young fellows who had tried to play the trick on him, and as he was finishing the two were so bored that they got up and left. He referred to them as they went and closed after an eloquent peroration by telling the society that he was a Kentucky member of Congress on his way to Washington. At this the society gathered round him and wanted to shake his hand. He chatted with them for a while, and the remainder of his visit was an ovation. The whole town came out to the hotel the next day to see him off, and the smart young fellows were the laughing-stock of all.—Cleveland Leader.

HOME AND FARM.

—Orchard grass sometimes runs to clumps because too little seed has been used.

—Mildew may be removed by dipping the stained parts into buttermilk, and pulling them in the sun.—Cleveland Leader.

—Stuffed Eggs: Boil the eggs hard; cut them in two, carefully; remove the yellow and mix it with fried onions, salt, pepper and a little parsley and a little ham chopped fine. Fill the whites with this and fry, so as to brown yellow.—Boston Transcript.

—An inventive woman advises when you drive a nail into a clothes-press or closet to hang clothes upon, to drive it through an empty spool up to the head. Select a spool with a hole large enough so that the nail will not split it.—Albany Journal.

—In the Western New York Agricultural Society it was recently stated that the planting of new vineyards was never so generally undertaken as at the present time. People are learning how to use grapes, and finding out, too, how health-promoting is their free use.

—Poultry should not be allowed to run on the same plots of ground year after year, without proper precautions for renewing, refreshing or disinfecting. It is a mistake to neglect these things, and to allow the accumulation of droppings for weeks and months without removal. Poultry-keeping without painstaking is profitless.—N. Y. Times.

—Salsify is a hardy winter plant, and is cultivated like carrots and parsnips. When you have secured a crop you will have a good substitute for oysters. Chop finely, and put in soups, or slice into small pieces, mix with batter and fry. There are several ways of cooking, but this vegetable may be cooked in any manner directed for oysters.

—White nut cake: Whites of twelve eggs beaten to a froth, one cup of butter, two cups sugar, three and one half cups flour, teaspoonful yeast powder. After the butter is well mixed add one large cocoanut, grated; one large tumbler full of the kernels of pecans and one tumbler full of blanched almonds, the almonds to be slightly mashed in a mortar.—Exchange.

—A delicious pudding is made by adding grated cocoanut to the common corn-starch blanc-mange. The cocoanut should be fresh. Stir it into the pudding only two or three minutes before taking that from the fire. Put it into a mould which has been dipped in cold water. Do not use an egg in this pudding, but make a boiled custard for a sauce. Pour it over the pudding, or serve in a fancy bowl, letting each one "help himself" to it.—N. Y. Post.

—Vinegar is better than ice for keeping fish over night. Housekeepers who are obliged to be economical should have their fish sent home toward night, and then, by putting a little vinegar on the fish, keep it perfectly well even in very hot weather. Fish is really improved in flavor under this treatment. Fish which has been kept in ice during the night, and been exposed on the shop board during the day, being frequently watered to make it look less stale, undergoes changes which destroy both flavor and nourishment.—The Household.

Bones on the Farm.

A solution of potash will reduce bone to a fine condition and make it available for plant food. Most farmers will use wood for fuel, and the ashes from the fifteen or twenty cords used in a year, if saved, would reduce all the bones ordinarily within reach of the farmer. The old-fashioned leach that used to stand at almost every farmer's back door for soap-making was a good contrivance for reducing the bones. But any light, strong cask or box will answer quite as well for this purpose. Water poured upon the ashes makes a lye, or solution of potash, strong enough to decompose the bones. The casks should stand under cover, so that the quantity of water applied to the bone and ashes may be under control. The time it will take to reduce the bone to a powder will depend upon the amount of potash in the ashes and attention bestowed upon the process. It is essential that the ashes and bone should be closely packed in the mass, and that they be kept in a moist state, adding water as it evaporates from the surface. The finer the bone before it is packed in the ashes the sooner will it be reduced. The process can be hastened by putting into the mass a few pounds of common potash. But this is only necessary to save time. Ashes from hickory, or any of the hard woods, contain sufficient potash to decompose the bone. When the mass is soft enough to break down with a spade or shovel, it can be mixed with land plaster, dried peat, or loam, to make it convenient for handling. It is a concentrated fertilizer, to be used with discretion in the hill, or applied as a top-dressing to growing crops in the garden or field. We are quite sure that any one who uses this preparation of bone and wood ashes, and sees the vigorous push it gives to garden and other crops, will be likely to continue it. But many farmers near sea-ports and railroad stations use coal mainly for fuel, and will have to resort to a hand or horse-mill to use up the waste bones. Small mills are extensively used by poultry men for crushing oyster shells as well as bone, and the machinery can be adjusted to break the bone coarsely for hen feed. The oil and gelatine of the bones have an alimentary value, and, turned into eggs, pay much better than when used as a fertilizer for the soil.—Wm. Clift, in American Agriculturist.

Black Pigs.

"A good horse may be of any color," and so may a good pig. But swine-breeders have thought otherwise, and a pig that is not black has no friends. It is much the same with short-horn cattle, which must now be red, and everybody has heard of the popularity of solid-colored Jerseys. A few years ago it was a rare thing to see a black pig, and yet there were good bacon and ham in those days; but in recent years the fashion has all run in favor of black swine. The demand now seems to have been supplied for these black pigs, and, fancy having been satisfied, the human passion for change will soon assert itself again and the white pigs will become popular. The coming event already casts its shadow before it, for there is a growing fancy for the red hogs of New Jersey, and these are masses of fat, with a very small proportion of lean muscle to carry the great load of fat. The red Jersey breeders pride themselves on the weights of their pigs, and unless these average near 700 pounds per head they are not happy. It is an easy transition from red to white, and it may be a change for the better, for since the black hogs have been in fashion we have had all those troubles about trichinae and hog cholera.—N. Y. Times.

She Was Artless and She Was Kind.

He was a married man, blessed—or, the opposite, as the reader may determine—with an extremely jealous wife. One evening not long since he seized a chance opportunity to do escort to a charming miss of sweet sixteen, whose blue eyes and dark drooping lashes exercised a glamour over every man who happened to come within range of their charm. At last her home was reached, and as they paused at the gate the maiden turned her lovely orbs full upon him and said:

"I am so grateful for your kindness, sir!"

"Don't mention it, I beg of you," he ejaculated, gallantly.

Very likely the unsophisticated maiden misunderstood the motive of his remark, for she quickly answered, in a reassuring tone:

NOT FIVE DOLLARS FOR DOCTOR IN FORTY-FIVE YEARS.

WATSONVILLE, SANTA CRUZ CO., CAL., Feb. 3d, 1884.

I am eighty-four years old and my wife is seventy-seven. We have raised a family of ten children. I have used BRANDRETH'S PILLS for the last forty-five years as my only family medicine, and my doctor's bills have not amounted to five dollars in all that time. I have used hundreds of boxes of BRANDRETH'S PILLS; with them I have cured my boys and girls of Scarlet Fever, Measles, Croup, Colds, Mumps, Diarrhœa and Constipation. I have recommended them to hundreds of other families, and never knew them to fail where ever they were used for disease of any kind. When my wife was seventy-three years old she was troubled with a very bad Cough, and it looked as if she would die with Consumption. She would not call in a doctor, but commenced taking BRANDRETH'S PILLS, two and three every night. In three weeks she was completely cured of her cough, and her general health is very good. I am sure that BRANDRETH'S PILLS have preserved and prolonged our lives. My health is particularly good, and before I die I wish you to publish this letter, as I want the world to know and profit by my experience. R. S. DAY.

My appetite, strength and flesh returned as I was cured with it."

THE STAGE-DRIVER'S STORY.

How General Scott's Life Was Saved and How His Driver Twice Escaped Death.

The traveler of the present day, as he is hurried along by the lightning express, in its buffet cars and palace sleepers, seldom reverts in thought to the time when the stage coach and packet were the only means of communication between distant points. It is rare that one of the real old time stage drivers is met with now-a-days and when the writer recently ran across Fayette Haskell, of Lockport, N. Y., he felt like a bibliographer over the discovery of some rare volume of "forgotten lore." Mr. Haskell, although one of the pioneers in stage driving (he formerly ran from Lewiston to Niagara Falls and Buffalo) is hale and hearty and bids fair to live for many years. The strange stories of his early adventures would fill a volume. At one time when going down a mountain near Lewiston with no less a personage than General Scott as a passenger, the brakes gave way and the coach came on the heels of the wheel horses. The only remedy was to whip the leaders to a gallop. Gaining additional momentum with each revolution of the wheels the coach swayed and pitched down the mountain side and into the streets of Lewiston. Straight ahead at the foot of the steep hill flowed the Niagara River, towards which the four horses dashed, apparently to certain death. Yet the firm hand never relaxed its hold nor the clear brain its conception of what must be done in the emergency. On dashed the horses until the narrow dock was reached on the river bank, when by a masterly exhibition of nerve and daring, the coach was turned in scarce its own length and the horses brought to a stand still before the pale lookers-on could realize what had occurred. A purse was raised by General Scott and presented to Mr. Haskell with high compliments for his skill and bravery.

Notwithstanding all his strength and his robust constitution the strain of continuous work and exposure proved too much for Mr. Haskell's constitution. The constant jolting of the coach and the necessarily cramped position in which he was obliged to sit, contributed to this end, and at times he was obliged to abandon driving altogether.

Speaking of this period he said:

"I found it almost impossible to sleep at night; my appetite left me entirely and I had a tired feeling which I never knew before and could not account for."

"Did you give up driving entirely?"

"No. I tried to keep up but it was only with the greatest effort. This state of things continued for nearly twenty years until last October when I went all to pieces."

"In what way?"

"Oh, I doubled all up; could not walk without a cane and was incapable of any effort or exertion. I had a constant desire to urinate both day and night and although I felt like passing a gallon every ten minutes only a few drops could escape and they thick with sediment. Finally it ceased to flow entirely and I thought death was very near."

"What did you do then?"

"What I should have done long before: listen to my wife. Under her advice I began a new treatment."

"And with what result?"

"Wonderful. It unstopped the closed passages and what was still more wonderful regulated the flow. The sediment vanished: my appetite returned and I am now well and good for twenty more years wholly through the aid of Warner's Safe Cure that has done wonders for me as well as for so many others."

Mr. Haskell's experience is repeated every day in the lives of thousands of American men and women. An unknown evil is undermining the existence of an innumerable number who do not realize the danger they are in until health has entirely departed and death perhaps stares them in the face. To neglect such important matters is like drifting in the current of Niagara above the Falls.

LIKE HIS FATHER,

He was Afflicted with Stone in the Bladder, Also, Like Him, was Cured by the Use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy (of Rondout, N. Y.).

Mr. S. W. Hicks, of Pleasant Valley, Duchess Co., N. Y., the son of Mr. E. S. Hicks, whose name may have appeared in this journal in connection with an article similar to this, was, like his father, afflicted with Stone in the Bladder, only that his case was more serious than his father's. The father advised the son to write to Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who, he said, would tell him what to do. Dr. Kennedy replied, suggesting the use of KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, which had worked so successfully in the father's case. Mr. Hicks, who had been assured by the local physicians that they could do nothing more for him, tried FAVORITE REMEDY. After two weeks' use of it he passed a stone ⅜ of an inch long and of the thickness of a pipe-stem. Since then he has had no symptoms of the return of the trouble. Here is a sick man healed. What better results could have been expected? What greater benefit could medical science confer? The end was gained; that is surely enough. Dr. Kennedy assures the public, by a reputation which he can not afford to forfeit or imperil, that the FAVORITE REMEDY does invigorate the blood, cures liver, kidney and bladder complaints, as well as all those diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females.

PAPILLON

"WHAT HON. J. C. BURROWS SAYS."

For more than five years past a member of my family has been afflicted with Hay Fever, culminating late in the fall with a hacking cough, which would increase in severity until the return of warm weather. Every remedy proved futile, and relief was only found in a change of climate. There was a recurrence of the difficulty last fall, attended with the usual cough and violent protracted sneezing. Not half a bottle of Papillon Catarrh Cure had been used before the cough entirely disappeared, and general relief followed. It is simply wonderful! Don't fail to try it.

THE SCOURGE.

General Alarm Across the Water Over the Cholera.

Measures Taken in Germany, England and Spain to Prevent the Spread of the Disease.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 28.—Secretary Freilinghuysen has received a cable message from Consul Mason at Marseilles, as follows: "Four deaths in Toulon. The cholera has reached Marseilles. Six deaths to Saturday noon. Weather very warm. A general exodus from the city has begun."

MADRID, June 28.—The authorities have ordered a week's quarantine of all persons arriving in Spain from France. Vessels from French ports, if healthy, will be quarantined ten days; disease on board, fifteen days.

PARIS, June 28.—Various trade organisations of Toulon have petitioned the Minister of Commerce to extend the dates of acceptances of bills, owing to the general collapse of local trade caused by the cholera.

MARSEILLES, June 28.—Three deaths from choleraic diarrhea were registered to-day. The Registry office is open day and night to facilitate prompt interment.

BERLIN, June 28.—In the Reichstag Von Boetticher, Home Secretary, announced the Cholera Committee had its first meeting to-day. Dr. Bettenkofer and Dr. Koch were members of the committee. He said the Government hoped to be able to avert by inspection all danger of the entry of the disease into the country without closing the frontier. Prof. Virchow doubted if the disease at Toulon was not Asiatic cholera. He blamed the defective precautions of the French Government, and drew attention to the bad sanitary condition of the Suez Canal. Von Boetticher said, in reply, that Prince Hohenlohe, German Embassador to Paris, had reported that France had adopted all necessary measures. The German Government, he said, also intended to propose international measures for the protection of the Suez Canal. General Von Moltke thanked Von Boetticher, in the name of the House, for his labors. The session closed with three cheers for Emperor William.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 28.—The Postoffice Department has been informed by the Italian Government that, in view of the outbreak of Asiatic cholera in France, mails from this country intended for delivery in Italy must be inclosed in tarred sacks. This precaution is regarded as necessary because Italian mails from this country pass through England and France. The Postmaster at New York has been instructed accordingly.

NATIONAL GARFIELD MONUMENT.

Description of the Design Unanimously Given the First Prize by the Committee.

CLEVELAND, O., June 26.—The Trustees of the Garfield National Monument Association to-day decided upon designs for the monument. The prize of $1,000 for the best design was awarded to Geo. H. Keller, of Hartford, Conn. The monument will be in the form of a tower. A carved and sculptured tomb is made the principal object of the memorial. The tower rises from broad terraces reached by wide-spreading steps, forming a dignified approach. A projecting porch at the base contains a vestibule on one side, which is the keeper's office, and on the other a room for relics and a visitor's register. The vestibule leads into a round vaulted chamber, the stone domical roof of which is carried on eight massive, polished granite columns in a circle around the sculptured tomb in the center. The pavement is tiled in harmonious colors and designs. The whole is lighted by richly-mullioned windows. An aisle or ambulatory outside of the columns surrounds the chamber, the side wall of which is decorated with niches for statues or vases of flowers. A spiral stone staircase leads from the ambulatory to the top of the tower, two hundred and fifty feet from the ground, in an ascent winding about the tomb below. Triple windows at irregular intervals command extended views for miles in every direction, at one point looking over Garfield's birth place, eight miles distant. Outside the monument, above the deeply recessed portal, is a terra cotta band or friese of sculpture, six feet in height, extending around the base of the tower, which is forty feet square. The friese is divided into panels, with bas reliefs representing Garfield as an educator, soldier and statesman, the long anxious watching of the world over his death-bed, and the funeral procession from Elberon to Cleveland. The cornice of the tower bears between the corbels and arms of the different States. Garfield's remains will be inclosed in a crypt below the level of the chamber, under the carved tomb. A family vault is provided back of the chamber.

The Washington Monument.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The Washington monument has now reached a height of four hundred and seventy feet, and the customary shift is being made to continue the structure twenty feet higher, at which point another and last change will be made, as only five courses will then remain to raise the structure to a height of five hundred feet. From this point the pyramidal roof (fifty-five feet high) will begin. All the stones which have been laid thus far have a smooth finish on the inside; but the stones of the next course jut a little on the inside, and the next ones a little further, and so on; these corbels forming the support for the interior arch, which will be the base of the pyramidal roof. It is expected that the monument will reach a height of 500 feet in less than two months' time. Steps will then be taken to commence the work upon the roof, and while that work itself will not occupy more than three weeks, the preparations for it will be so delicate and of such a different character from any heretofore made, that it will be some time before the laying of stone is begun. By the 1st of November it is confidently expected that the structure will be under cover and practically completed.

There will be some finishing touches to be made, perhaps, but these can wait until next year, if necessary. Very detailed and carefully prepared plans, show how the roof is to be constructed, and everything has been arranged in advance.

A ROMANTIC STORY.

James J. Mooney Marries Two Sisters After Being Jilted by Each.

DUNDAFF, PA., June 27.—James J. Mooney, of Perry County, is on his second wedding trip, his first having been made fourteen months ago. He has been stopping with his bride a few days with a relative, a farmer of central Susquehanna County. Two years ago Mooney was engaged to be married to Miss Anne Mc[illegible], the daughter of a farmer in Perry County. At a Sunday School pic-nic Mooney found fault with his affianced because she received the attentions of another young man. A quarrel resulted and the engagement was broken off. Mooney then began his attentions to Betty, the sixteen year old sister of his betrothed. They became engaged, and the day was set for the wedding. Two days before that day Miss Betty took offense at something her intended had said, or done, and broke the engagement. Mooney was unable to change her mind, and the elder sister, his first love, who had not spoken to him since they had become estranged, wrote to him, expressing her regrets that her sister had treated him so shabbily. He renewed his suit for Miss Anna's hand and was again accepted. They were married in the spring of 1883. Now comes the most remarkable part of the story. Mrs. Mooney died three months later. Last winter the young widower began paying his attentions again to the younger, who had refused to marry him a year ago, after all the arrangements had been made for the wedding. She accepted him again, and they were married on Tuesday, and are now taking the same route on their wedding tour that Mooney and his other bride did a few years ago.

ATTACKED A MISSION.

Several Wounded in a Fight in Mexico.

CITY OF MEXICO, June 28.—The Protestant mission at Celaca, on the Central Railroad, was recently attacked by a mob, who destroyed the furniture and other effects. The Rev. A. W. Greenman and the other residents at the mission escaped to a neighboring house. They were pursued and fired on, and returning the fire killed one and wounded several of the mob, which then dispersed. The mission party was then protected by the Federal soldiers. Greenman is now at the American legation here. The Mayor of Celaca encouraged the attack and refused protection.

A Strange Drowning Case.

BALTIMORE, MD., June 28.—A singular drowning case occurred yesterday at Deal's Island, Kent County, Md. Early in the morning Captain Prettyman White drove down to the landing and out to the edge of the wharf. Leaving his four-year-old child in the buggy, Captain White unhitched his horse from the buggy and tied it to a post, fearing the steamboat would frighten the animal and cause him to run away. After securing his horse Captain White turned around, and was horrified to see the wind blowing the carriage, in which was seated his child, over the edge of the pier. He sprang toward it, but too late; it had turned over as it fell, and the child was caught under the body of the buggy and drowned. The corpse was recovered late in the day.

An Unfortunate Family.

GRAFTON, W. VA., June 28.—George H. Price, an employe of the Grafton and Greenbrier Railroad, was fatally crushed between an engine and car while shifting cars on the Baltimore and Ohio Transfer this evening. He was about twenty years of age, and the second one of the family to meet a sudden death, his father having been run over and cut to pieces by an engine two years ago, within a hundred yards of the piece of this accident.

Postal Orders.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The Postmaster General has issued an order under the provisions of the act approved June 9, 1884, stating that all persons, not publishers or news agents, are entitled to send through the mails, without regard to place of mailing destination or distance, newspapers and periodical publications of the second class weighing not more than four ounces, by affixing thereto a one-cent postage stamp.

A Chinaman Forger.

WACO, TEX., June 28.—Wing Chung, a young Chinaman, was arrested here to-day on suspicion of crookedness. On his person was found a draft for $20,000 purporting to be drawn by the Clarinda National Bank, of Clarinda, Iowa, on the First National Bank of Chicago, and indorsed in Wing's favor. Inquiring telegrams indicate the draft a forgery.

A Heavy Suit.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Elsie Bethune, administratrix of John G. Bethune, of New York, has brought suit against the well-known turfman, Thos. J. Nichols, of Bourbon County, Ky., for $60,000, the value of a number of race horses, and also $5,000 damages for their unlawful detention.

Sentenced To Be Shot.

MADRID, June 27.—The Cabinet to-day, King Alfonso presiding, decided that two officers found guilty of desertion at Santa Coloma de Farnes, in April last, be shot immediately. The Government urged that this severity was necessary to preserve the discipline of the army. It has caused a painful sensation. The newspapers of the country and Senators and Deputies are using the utmost endeavors to obtain a commutation of the sentences.

Found in a Well.

MATTOON, ILL., June 27.—Great excitement was occasioned here yesterday by the finding of the body of a Mrs. Cook, who has been missing for a week, at the bottom of an eighty foot well, with her throat cut from ear to ear, and her feet weighted with iron. Her husband, Dan Cook, and Simon Johnson, a supposed accomplice, are under arrest.

The Cholera in France.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—The surgeon general of the marine hospital service at Washington received the following telegram through the State Department from the United States consul at Marseilles: "The situation at Toulon is rather worse. There were nine deaths on Wednesday and ten deaths on Thursday. There are sixty-two cases now at the naval hospital. The disease thus far is epidemic."

CONGRESSIONAL.

Probably the Last Week of Congress.

Prospects of the Trade Dollar Bill not Bright—Provisions for the Payment of the Farragut Claim—The Fitz John Porter Bill.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—In regard to adjournment, the majority side of the House will begin work to-morrow with the idea of pushing it through by Thursday. Mr. Randall said at the close of yesterday's work, that he believed Congress would adjourn by Thursday. Mr. Allison, however, of the Senate Appropriations Committee, expressed the opinion that, from what he knew of the business on the Senate side, it would not be possible to adjourn before Saturday. Another Senator, of long experience, said to-night he thought the date of adjournment would be Monday next. This would end the work on Saturday and give till Monday to engross the last bills. Senator Cameron, of Pennsylvania, is determined to make an earnest effort to have his motion acted upon to discharge the Committee of Finance from further consideration of the trade dollar bill. The river and harbor and sundry civil are the only general appropriation bills now before the Senate, and indications are that both these measures will be finished by Tuesday night. With these bills out of the way, Mr. Cameron will have a fair chance to obtain a vote on a motion to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill to redeem trade dollars. The Senate yesterday inserted an item in the Deficiency Bill, providing $143,000 for the settlement of the Farragut prise and bounty claims. This is a sum which has long been due, but Congress several times declined to appropriate after the exposure made of the enormous fees taken by General Butler. In making the appropriation this time the proviso is added that all moneys due shall be paid directly to the claimants in the case, and not into any other hands. The failure of the President to return the Fitz John Porter bill to the Senate yesterday without approval has encouraged the friends of that measure to hope that there is no ground for the report that the President had decided to disapprove it. It is known that this subject was the main topic of the discussion at the Cabinet meeting Friday last, and the fact that the bill was not returned yesterday would indicate that no conclusion had yet been reached.

THEY OBJECT.

Much Dissatisfaction Expressed in Regard to the Garfield Monument.

CLEVELAND, June 29.—A deal of dissatisfaction and comment has been stirred up as to the design for the Garfield monument. Out of twenty-seven opinions published here to-day, twenty-one are dead set against it, while the remaining six rather reluctantly express their approval of the selection. Some of the twenty-one that are denunciatory in their opinions says that it looks like a lighthouse, while others say it would make a good shot tower. Keller, the designer, will confer with the committee to-morrow.

Wanted to Clean Out the Family.

CLEVELAND, June 29.—An attempt at murder took place at the residence of Mr. Reed, living in the southeast part of this county, on the Widow Stewart's farm. A few days ago an old soldier hired to Reed to do "chores" about the place. A misunderstanding arose between him and the women folks about the house as to how he should do some work. After some words had passed between the parties the old soldier became enraged, and made an attack upon the women with a club. The women ran into the house and locked the door. The man procured a corn cutter, sharpened it and made a raid upon the doors, burst into the house, and struck twice at Mrs. Reed with the corn cutter. Mr. Reed, who was at the barn at work, heard the screams of the woman, and ran to the house, arriving just as the villain had the cutter raised to deal Mrs. Reed a blow on the head. He threw up his hand to catch the cutter, to save the life of his wife, when he received a cut that severed two of his fingers, and split his hand open to the wrist. The man made his escape, but will be arrested.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

In the Senate on the 25th the legislative bill consideration was resumed, and the committee's proposition discussed to the hour of adjournment.

In the House the majority report in the Chalmers-Manning contested election case, from Mississippi, was taken up and adopted. This seats Chalmers, Democrat. Discussion of the "back-bone" railroad company forfeiture bill was entered into, and the House adjourned.

IN the Senate on the 26th the legislative bill was proceeded with, and the committee's recommendation to strike out the House clause was agreed to. The bill then passed.

In the House the bill to forfeit the land grant of the "Backbone" Railroad in Louisiana was passed, and pending a motion to reconsider, the House adjourned.

ON the 27th the Senate passed the bill granting a right of way through Indian Territory to the Southern Kansas Railroad. The Committee on Privileges and Elections was discharged from further consideration of the House bill on the electoral count, and a Conference Committee ordered.

In the House, bills were passed to relieve the soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion, and for the benefit of Myra Clark Gaines.

IN the Senate on the 28th the general deficiency bill was taken up, and on motion of Mr. Sherman, an item of $3,950 was added, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to reimburse the amount paid for expenses of the Commission appointment to go to Louisiana in 1877. The bill then passed. The House non-concurred in the Senate amendments to the legislative bill. After considering the business reported from the Committee on Labor in committee of the whole, the House adjourned.

—There is a little ground mole which has for several years had its hole close to the station at Devon, on the Pennsylvania Railroad. It has never been molested, and accordingly goes about with great freedom. It is said to be an unfailing barometer, and for several summers it has never been seen to come out without rain occurring within twelve hours.—Pittsburgh Post.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The feature of the market this week has been the spirited competition for old types of shipping tobaccos, principally for the regie styles. The immediate stimulus to this demand is supposed to have been a playing for position by bidders on the Italian contract. At all events it has been a very active demand, and prices have advanced about 50c. more. Other foreign styles have been strong, and lugs are about 25c. higher. Redried tobaccos are also about 50c. higher. Receipts of the latter have been large comparatively, and it is to be inferred from country advices that in this contingent alone all reliances for future receipts must be placed, as the country is practically bare of other holdings of dark and heavy styles. We quote full weight packages of new crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 50 @ 6 75	$6 00 @ 7 50
Common lugs	7 00 @ 7 25	7 00 @ 8 00
Medium lugs	7 50 @ 7 85	8 00 @ 9 00
Good lugs	8 25 @ 8 50	10 00 @11 00
Common leaf	8 00 @ 8 50	10 00 @11 00
Medium leaf	8 75 @ 9 50	12 00 @16 00
Good leaf	10 00 @11 00	17 00 @20 00
Fine and fancy leaf	12 00 @16 00	....

Miscellaneous Items.

IN a difficulty about a disreputable woman three men lost their lives in Harlan County, a few days since. The triple murder was committed at the house of Jas. Howard, on Puckett's Creek, between the hours of 9 and 10 o'clock. Dillard Johnston went to the house of Jas. Howard in the night and demanded admittance. Howard opened the door, when Johnston, under cover of darkness, took deliberate aim, fired and killed him. He fell headlong from the door into the yard and never spoke a word afterwards. After Johnston had committed the murder he walked away and met a woman at the fence, about thirty or forty yards from the house. This was the woman who was at the bottom of the whole affair. After talking with the woman a few minutes Johnston went back to the house and made inquiry for one Joseph Neall, telling Howard's wife that he would kill her if she did not tell where he was. The terrified woman said she knew nothing of the whereabouts of Neall. Johnston then forcibly entered the house to search for him. He stooped down to look under the bed, and while in this position he was shot in the hip by Neall, who was concealed behind the cook stove. Johnston wheeled around and saw Neall with his pistol leveled ready to fire again. Johnston, quick as lightning, leveled his weapon also, and both men fired at the same instant, and both were killed, neither speaking a word after the fatal shots were fired.

WHILE Peyton Strichline, of Wolfe County, was working in his corn field, a few days ago, a bullet from an assassin's pistol penetrated his brain, causing instant death.

KIRBY OSBORN, while drunk, tried to intimidate the occupants of Oldfield & Bird's store, in Morgan County, but Bird emptied the contents of a shotgun into his body, and settled the difficulty.

THE celebrated Hamphill-Miller horse poisoning suit for $10,000 damages, taken from Jessamine County, to Woodford on a change of venue, has been postponed on account of the death of a juror's daughter. The case will get a rest for six months.

MR. GEORGE ALLEN, son of Almauser Allen, of Spencer County, was killed by lightning the other evening, near Tarr's store, in that county. He and his horse were discovered next morning in the roadway, both dead. He was struck on the head, the current passing down his back to the saddle and thence to the ground. He had been to a neighbor's, and left for home on horseback about dark, accompanied by a dog, which was unhurt.

THE dead body of an unknown German, aged about twenty-eight, was found under the third arch of the Newport Railroad Bridge. The body had been robbed, but whether the death was accidental or the result of foul play is not determined.

DUNCAN MCMILLAN, residing on Davis street in Ludlow, and employed as foreman of the passenger car cleaning force of the Cincinnati Southern Railroad, was struck by an engine, and instantly killed, the other morning.

AT Louisville, Lizzie, the five-year-old daughter of Frank Fetter, the baker, fell against a pot of boiling water, upsetting it and scalding herself terribly about the lower extremities. Her life is despaired of.

WESS LEAN, of Mt. Vernon, familiarly known as "Cushion foot," died from poison taken some time ago. His wife died at that time, and three others of the family are down sick from the poison. The poison is supposed to have been taken in a strawberry pie.

A NEGRO child, Linda, daughter of George Clifford, of Covington, aged three years, died a few days ago under peculiar circumstances. The child was hearty and well, when a negro women named Kate Bush, who resides in Central Covington, went to the house and sent out little Joe Clifford with a small tin bucket for ten cents worth of whisky. The woman, Kate Bush, drank a small quantity, and set the bucket down, when, it is supposed, the child drank enough to cause death.

ATTORNEY GENERAL HARDIN has decided that all certificates heretofore issued to teachers of common schools are null and void, according to the school law passed by the last Legislature. According to this decision holders of certificates will not be entitled hereafter to draw any money from the State without being re-examined.

JOHN MILLER, an employe of the Cincinnati Southern Railroad, at Nicholasville, the other day, had his foot badly crushed by a rail which he was handling. The foot is badly mangled. Three toes were cut off, and the metatarsal portion of the foot is injured.

THE streams near Nicholasville, lately filled with valuable fish, have been outraged by persons using dynamite cartridges. The Government has sent out detectives for that portion of the State to put a stop to it.

KENTUCKY woods, in some places, are full of squirrels.

MISS PEMBERTON, a young lady engaged in teaching school in Sandersville, dropped dead in the school-room the other afternoon while examining a class. Heart disease.

THE convention to nominate a candidate to fill the unexpired term of the late Judge Reid, will be held at Maysville July 17.

WILLIAM FETTIE, of Newport, was drowned while bathing in the Licking, the other day.

THE DAIRY.

—The influence of good feeding, good care and kindness, in increasing the flow of milk, is well illustrated by the Channel Islands cattle. On these islands the cow is the pet of the household, and her great milk yield has been developed solely by the extra solicitude shown for her.

—We find the following good bit of advice going the rounds of our exchanges: "Better to borrow money with which to buy cows and young thrifty calves than to go in debt for machinery that is not absolutely indispensable. The first will continue to appreciate in value, while the latter will continue to depreciate. The first will pay the principal and the interest. The latter will lose a part of the cost annually." A little ingenuity will often take the place of costly machinery, and save many a dollar if rightly applied.—American Dairyman.

—A correspondent of the Country Gentleman tells how he overcame the trouble of cream foaming in churning and the butter being hard to come: "I had four gallons of cream three days old, in earthen jars, put into a room where the thermometer stood at eighty degrees. The milk when put into the churn was at sixty-five degrees, and the churn sixty degrees; this was in a room at eighty degrees. In fifteen minutes the butter was ready to be taken out of the churn and as pretty, yellow butter as I ever saw. This certainly pays for heating a room and having the milk at right temperature."

—Henry Ward Beecher pays his apostrophe to the never to be forgotten village cow. In appearance, he says, she is a cross between an old hair-trunk and an abandoned hoop skirt, and after consuming his garden a neighbor comes over and says: "Now, I don't desire any quarrel, but I want you to keep your cow out of my shrubbery." "And I want you, my friend," said I, "to keep your shrubbery out of my cow, it spoils the taste of the milk." He then sadly remarks: "Ever after that there was a coolness between us, and my neighbor's wife ceased to patronize our house when she wanted to borrow a cupful of yeast."

—It is the general belief among farmers that milk for calves should be slightly warmed, at least to the temperature natural when taken from the cow. The calves will drink it more freely at this warmth. When, however, the heating is done on the stove it is apt to be warmer than new milk. This is injurious. Milk that has been scalded is constipating, even when given cold. If the calf takes food much above the temperature of the stomach the digestive organs will be weakened. Too warm food and drinks are fruitful causes of dyspepsia in men and women, and will be in farm animals if the latter are subject to their influences.—American Cultivator.

Cheese as Food.

Cheese, when properly made, and thoroughly cured, so that all of its substance is available for food, has twice the value of butchers' meat for sustaining life, and is quite as easily digested, and as wholesome. But all cheese, even when well cured, is not equal to its highest possibilities. Many circumstances interfere with its perfection. In the first place, good cheese can only be made out of good milk, and this is not always at the command of the cheese maker. The milk which was good when it came from the cow may not be so when it reaches the cheese vat; it may be sour or stale, or uncleanly; and further, milk itself is liable to wide variations in its constituents, thereby varying the quality of cheese made from it. But these are only accidental irregularities, that are not always present, and cheese made from milk which is free from them should not be condemned on their account. They are avoidable, and do not, in fact, give much ground for complaint against the use of cheese. There other things connected with the use of cheese equally avoidable, which give rise to well-grounded complaints, that are telling heavily against its good name and use. Bearing in mind the indigestible, and consequently unwholesome, condition of newly-pressed curd, or, as it is called, green cheese, and remembering that this condition only abates gradually, as the cheese advances in curing, the ill effects of putting it into consumption too soon, while it is yet in its green state, will be understood. Those who are at all familiar with the traffic in cheese know very well that much of the cheese of commerce, when it goes into consumption, is too imperfectly cured to have its food value fully available. It is so indigestible as to be unhealthful, and it is used at a loss because much of it is not digested at all. Thus the practice of thrusting green cheese upon the markets gives rise to just grounds for objections to its healthfulness and value and greatly restricts its consumption, all of which would be obviated by retaining the goods in the curing room till they are fit for use.—Prof. L. B. Arnold, in Nat. Live Stock Journal.

Packing Butter.

The Iowa Homestead thus answers an inquiry for the best method of packing butter to keep:

Throw away your dash churn and get a barrel or box churn. Churn at the right temperature and wash out the buttermilk with cold water. Use the best salt, work the butter as little as possible. This will bring your butter up to such a high standard that people who know good butter won't let you pack it away. But if you can resist their offer, put it in a very clean vessel, either a crock or a clear ash or oak tub, well soaked in brine from within. Fill up solid from the bottom and keep covered between churnings with brine. Keep in a cool, clean place. If you want something extra nice put your butter in a clean sack, as it comes in granules from the churn, after all the buttermilk is washed out, and immerse in a tub of brine, keeping it entirely covered. Salt it when you want to use it. Between you and me, the salt don't make the butter keep any better, its just a matter of taste.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—Glass made from sand procured on the Geiser ranch, near San Antonio, Tex., is now made in that city.

—An engraver at Versailles, whose name is not given, is said to affirm that he has discovered a method for taking photographs in colors, being able thus to reproduce the colors of the individual or landscape photographed.

—Three stages in the industrial interest of the country are shown in the following figures: In 1831 the value of the cotton-mills in the United States was $40,000,000, in 1870 it was $141,000,000, and in 1880, $208,225,000.

—Silk, which is carelessly treated in dyeing with some artificial colors, loses much of its lustre; as the workmen say, it is no longer silk, "it is changed into cotton." This can be avoided by the addition of soap to the dye bath.—Textile Recorder.

—A novelty in the baking trade is a loaf of bread that does not require cutting after it is baked. It is shaped like Vienna bread, and so made as to form layers or slices of uniform thickness, which by pulling gently are detached, thus avoiding the use of the knife.—Boston Globe.

—Hog-skin is used extensively for saddles because it is the only leather that all the stretch can be taken out of, and there is no other leather that will stand so much friction and wear so well. All the straps are made of dressed cow-skin. There is little strength in hog-skin, so it can not be used for straps.—Chicago Times.

—There is likely to be a revival of the beet sugar industry in England. Some of the works long ago abandoned are being put in order, and large plantings of beets for sugar will be made in their neighborhood. One difficulty in English growing of beets for sugar is that the growing seasons are so cool as to greatly diminish the proportions of saccharine matter in the root as compared with beets grown in France and other warm climates.

—The cement used in patching the uppers of fine shoes is generally made by dissolving gutta percha in chloroform until the mixture is about as thick as sirup. Scrape and pare clean around the hole to be covered, and thin carefully with a long chamfer the edges of a bit of leather to be applied. Only a little of the cement is needed, but the surfaces must be pressed close together. The parts will adhere firmly in a few minutes.—Exchange.

—"Strawberry short-cake flour" is the latest invention of an improving civilization. An enterprising Connecticut firm stirs flour, butter, baking powder and salt together in proper proportions, evaporates all moisture from the compound, boxes and labels it, and it is ready for use. All the housewife needs to do is to mix the flour with milk, bake it, lay on the strawberries and allow her hungry family to take the cake.—Hartford Post.

—Wood is being employed scientifically in surgery in a different form from ordinary splints. A foreigner has introduced wood wool as a cheap and useful dressing for wounds, and it is being prepared extensively as a commercial staple for surgical dressings. It is finely ground wood, such as is extensively used in the manufacture of paper. It is a clean-looking, delicate-fibered, soft, yellowish-white substance, having an odor of fresh wood, and absorbs an immense quantity of liquid.

PITH AND POINT.

—Good will subdues its opposite as water does fire.

—Kate Field is very angry at Felt, a Mormon elder, and has said so in round terms. Now we presume Felt feels as mad as Kate Field, and if Kate feels that Felt feels that way, we must all feel that Kate Field should give Felt a fair field to show how he feels in the matter and in this way the public may arrive at the cause of the ill-feeling between Felt and Kate Field, and decide who has the right to feel the most aggrieved in this Field-Felt feeling.—Lowell Citizen.

—"What was all that scuffling about down stairs?" asked Mrs. Hilboots, as her lord and master strode into the room. "Nothing, but that monkey-faced dude asked for Sarah Ann." "What did he say?" "Oh, he began saying he was speaking from the bottom of his heart, and so on." And what answer did you give?" "I grew spasmodic, too," answered Hilboots, gently tapping his little angelic No. 12 shoe, "and gave him an answer from the bottom of my sole."—Atlanta Constitution.

THE new school law makes the pay of the County Superintendent a very uncertain quantity. He will have to submit his claim to the County Court which may or may not make him a sufficient allowance. There is one thing certain, and that is that the Court will not pay the Superintendent much where he does not make an active officer and comply strictly with the law. He will have to be active and make his work effective before he can expect any favors at the hands of the Court which is particularly cautious how it makes allowances.

The State of Kentucky has made an appropriation of $10,000 for the purpose of fostering and assisting the counties in making a favorable display of the resources of the State. This sum is placed under control of a Commission, of which the State Geologist is Chairman, and a portion of it will undoubtedly be set apart for the benefit of this county.

Kentucky, so great in her resources, has never had an opportunity like the present for demonstrating to the world the extent and richness of those resources, as this is the first organized effort ever made by the State at large to secure proper displays of its immense capacities.

This opportunity is not for one section of the State, but for the whole people of Kentucky. It will present our State with all its wealth, resources, and attractions before the world, and will give each county its proper place in the aggregation. The county that most interests itself in the effort will make the best showing for its means and will be judged accordingly. It is, therefore, every one's interest to make the best display we can.

The managers of the Southern Exposition have added new and wonderful attractions to the display this year, and every citizen of Kentucky will feel a just pride in the continued success of this, the largest Exposition ever successfully organized and maintained in this country, except the Centennial of 1876. It is estimated that the admissions of Kentucky people alone will number over 500,000, and on the basis of last year's admissions and the new attractions that the general admissions will be 1,500,000.

Our county should make a creditable display. We have plenty of resources, and with co-operation of all our people we can make a splendid exhibit. We ask suggestions and contributions from every spirited citizen of the county, and we hope this effort to advance the interests of this county and State will be heartily seconded by our people. For any special information write to Bennet H. Young, Pres't. or J. M. Wright, General Manager, Southern Exposition, at Louisville, Ky., or apply to any of the Commissioners of Boone county, N. S. Walton, J. F. Grant, Petersburg; John Stephens, Bullittsville; J. A. Davis, Hebron, and W. L. Riddell, Burlington.

In Senator Williams' speech on the bill pensioning Mexican soldiers, he estimates that the number to be pensioned, including widows, will not exceed 800, and he supports that estimate, which is the one made by the House Committee four years ago, by the statement that of his original company of 100 but thirteen survive, while of his regiment of 1,100 only 160 are now living. This Mexican bill rests on the same principal as the bills pensioning Revolutionary survivors and survivors of the war 1812, and can be defended on the same principles. Senator Williams has been an earnest and industrious worker for this bill during his term, and his speech in its favor was a most effective one.—Louisville Commercial.

Mr. E. A. Tucker was in town last Thursday. He has sold his farm near Florence and moved to the city, where he is engaged in business. We dislike to erase the name of such persons as Mr. Tucker from the list of our countymen.

The day has come when to leave the grave of the departed one unmarked by a neat stone, is not suffered by even those in the most ordinary walks of life, and all can be pleased in both design and price by Huschart & Co., of Lawrenceburg, Ind. John Beall, of Hebron is their agent.

The fishing club sent a delegation to the river at J. S. Balsly's, Monday, to ascertain what can be done at that point in the seining business. The river (not the boys) was too high for seining, and after nearly dragging a whole in the bottom of the river, they abandoned the job, poorly paid. June was so clever to the party it will try its luck again at that point.

Huschart & Co., of Lawrenceburg, Indiana, put an elegant Scottish granite monument up at the grave of R. C. Green last Saturday. It is about ten feet high and while handsome, is a good, substantial piece of work, and is the finest monument in the cemetery. Huschart & Co., are putting up a great deal of work on this side of the river.

The Burlington fishing club measured water down on Woolper one day last week. Its labors were crowned with success, and the party brought home a large string of small fish. The party as constituted on the above occasion consisted of two attorneys, the County Clerk and a drug clerk, a combination which so frightened the fish that they hunted the most secluded places they could find.

Two little boys from Rising Sun were jug fishing from above Bellevue to Rising Sun a few days since, and as their fleet of jugs was passing McVille, one of them hooked a cat-fish which weighed 100 pounds. Dr. Gill Rice discovered the jug when the fish commenced running with it, and acting under his directions the little fellows landed it, but only to make it more secure, when they floated down to where their father was fishing before taking the fish out of the water.

Rice & Marshall, proprietors of the ferry, the Kentucky landing of which is at McVille, were in town the other day to have the Court change the landing from Bellevue to McVille. The Judge considered the matter, and held he could not do it, and advised them the best way to dispose of the matter was for them to give notice as required by the statutes governing the establishing of ferries, and then come into court and make their motion. Their license call for Believe as the Kentucky landing.

Of the order of Sons of Temperance there is but one lodge in this county that maintains its organization, and that one is located at Petersburg. Last Saturday was the time and Parlor Grove the place which, some time before, had been selected by this lodge for its annual picnic, an occasion that has become extremely popular on account of the excellent order and fine enjoyment prevailing on like past occasions which were under the auspices of Petersburg lodge.

The morning promised a propitious day, and at an early hour, the Steamer Minnie, which had been chartered for the day, commenced at Aurora to receive those who desired to enjoy a free boat ride, and participate in a day's unalloyed enjoyment. It was about 11 a. m., when the Minnie roundedto at the grove, and a crowd of 640 composed of persons from Aurora, Petersburg, Lawrenceburg and the various way landings, disembarked. This crowd was largely augmented by persons from the surrounding country, coming in on horseback, on foot and in buggies.

The services of the Aurora band had been secured, and dancing was the order of the day, the entire spacious platform being necessary to furnish room so numerous were the devotees of Terpsichore.

The dinner to which all were invited was abundant and displayed a thorough knowledge of the culinary art on the part of those who prepared the excellent feast, and many a young man wondered if his girl assisted in the preparation of the delicacies with which his palate was charmed.

The young ladies wore their sweetest smiles, while each young gentleman endeavored to surpass all others in gallantry. The older members of the happy gathering enjoyed the day intensely and were loth to turn their faces homeward when the sound of the Minnie's whistle warned them that old Sol had journeyed so far to the west that it was necessary to dissolve the merry crowd and return from whence they came.

The best of order prevailed during the day, nothing occurring to interrupt the pleasure of anyone.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

"She's her mother's own child!"
They remarked, as they smiled
At the flippant and fair little maiden,
With an eloquent eye,
And simpering sigh,
And with flounces and furbelows laden.

"Her mother was pert,
And a terrible flirt,
And sorrow enough it has brought her;
And I'm sorry, ah me!"
For an old man, "to see
Those very same traits in the daughter!"

Another was seen,
With the air of a queen,
A beautiful, womanly creature;
Her step bright with youth,
And the clear light of truth,
On her face—its most eloquent feature.

Sweet homage was paid
To the dignified maid;
Her friends all depended upon her;
And all spoke her name
With respect, as became
Her rank—as a real maid-of-honor.

She's her mother's own child!"
Said the old [illegible] and smiled,
His thoughts back with memory going;
"Her brain is well filled!
Her heart is well tilled!
And she is a woman worth knowing!

"Ah, if my son Fred
Would but fancy to wed
This maid, and relinquish the other,
"I'm sure that the boy
Would wedlock enjoy;
For the daughter resembles her mother!"

If mothers are vain,
And to vanity train
Their dear little innocent daughters,
Ah! they must expect
They will shortly be wrecked
In the dark and tempestuous waters.

O! mothers be true
To the trust that in you
Is reposed—each a thoughtful madonna—
That you daughters may be,
From sea unto sea,
Proclaimed, in all ranks, maids-of-honor!
